Poetry.

GONE BEFORE.

There's a beautiful face in the silent sky,
Which follows me over and over,
With smiling eyes and sunlit hair,
With velvetlike lips, yet with breath of prayer
That I feel, but cannot hear.

The dimpled hand and ringlet of gold
Lie low in a marble sleep,
I stretch my hand for a clasp of old,
But the empty air is strangely cold,
And my right alone I keep.

There's a sinless brow with a radiant crown,
And a cross laid down in the dust;
There's a smile where never a shade comes now,
And learn no more from those dear eyes flow
So sweet in their innocent trust.

Ah, well! And summer has come again,
Singing her same old song;
But, oh! it sounds like a sob of pain,
As it floats through the sunshine and the rain
O'er the hearts of the world's great throng.

There's a beautiful region above the skies,
And I long to reach its shore;
For I know I shall find my treasure there—
The laughing eyes and amber hair,
Of the loved one gone before.

THE PRIZE RING.

A Brief History of the Roped Arena from the Time of Jim Figg.

The first champion of England as recognized by the literature of the day was James Figg. He tried to popularize the ring by opening an amphitheatre in London and keeping the patrons out down to the respectable class. England's greatest fighters had the names of Pipes and Greetings. George Taylor followed in the line of British champions. Next come Jack Broughton, who stripped boxing of much of the rough and tumble nature. Broughton thoroughly revised the ring rules and rigorously prohibited "gouging," the scientific term for putting out the eye of an antagonist with the thumb; "purling," which meant kicking a man when he was down with nailed shoes; striking in vital spots below the waistband, and seizing a man when on his knees and pound him to death. All these outrageous practices were "allowable" before Broughton's advent to the head of the profession. These changes were brought about in 1743. Broughton held the championship for half a generation. In 1751 he met a fighter by the name of Stack, who blinded him in 14 minutes and won the fight. The Duke of Cumberland backed Broughton and lost £10,000 on the fight. In line came Edward Hunt, a pupil of Broughton, Bill Stevens, Bill Darts, Harry Sellars, Stephen Oliver, Tom Johnson and Ben Bree. The advent of Mendoza marked the beginning of the second era of the prize ring. Like Broughton, Mendoza, a London Hebrew of Portuguese descent, was a good deal of a reformer. He was well educated, and endeavored in every way possible to refine and humanize the ring. Pugilistic history says that he was a natural genius in the use of his fists, and it is believed that he was the most scientific boxer that ever lived.

Prize fighting at this period had risen to the dignity of being called "the old national game" of England. From the throne down it was fashionable to patronize its professors and encourage the expounders of the science. A fight between Humphreys and Martin, the Bath butchers, in 1786, threw the whole country into a state of the wildest excitement, and while it came off the Prince of Wales, the Duke of York, the Duke of Orleans and a large number of the French nobility then in England were present. The immense sum for that day of £40,000 hung on the result. Martin was beaten. The next great fight was between Humphreys and Mendoza. The match was for 400 guineas, and was fought on a 24-foot stage in a paddock at Oldham, January 9, 1788. The public interest in this contest was then greater than in the Martin fight, and it was witnessed by at least a quorum of the House of Lords. Mendoza, owing to a slip on the stage, was beaten. They again fought the following year, when Mendoza proved to be the victor. A third fight between them in 1790 established Mendoza's complete superiority.

John Jackson, a well educated Londoner, was the next champion. He fought his first fight with Mendoza, the then champion in 1795. This Jackson won in the presence of a large crowd of English aristocracy in nine rounds and fifteen minutes. The Prince of Wales gave him a valuable ring for winning. In three years he resigned the championship and left the ring for good. Then in course of time came Tom Crib, who was England's most popular champion. In 1810, when the Virginia negro, Molineaux, went to England to fight Crib the whole British country trembled. The fight took place on Contnall common, Sussex. The throne and nobility were all there. It was a desperate fight, ending in the defeat of Molineux. They met again September 28, 1811. In the ninth round Molineaux's jaw was broken by a blow from Crib, and in the eleventh he was knocked senseless. The fight lasted twenty minutes. One of the famous fighters of England was John Shaw, the life guardsman, who was killed at Waterloo. His reputation as a fighter rested mainly on his defeat of Painter in a hard contest on Hounslow Heath in 1815. Painter had beaten Tom Sprig, Crib's successor as champion, and had issued a challenge to any man in England for the championship. Before Crib or anyone else could reply he was ordered to Belgium with his regiment. His bravery there was so remarkable that Sir Walter Scott deemed it worthy of commemoration in both poetry and prose.

The next most important events in the annals of pugilism were the three remarkable fights between Ben Caunt and Bill Thompson, better known as "Bendigo." The first battle took place in 1835, and the one for the championship in 1845. Ten thousand persons, it is said, were present at this encounter. Caunt's championship belt was exhibited. "Bendigo" put it on and offered to bet his rival that he could not win it back. At the end of two hours and ten minutes "Bendigo" was declared the winner. "Bendigo," it is said, was educated for the ministry, and, after fighting all the great pugilists of his day, joined the church, and preached to the roughs and toughs of London, doing good work among them.

There was a terrible fight in 1849 between Hays and Madden. They fought 185 rounds. During six hours these bruisers stood up and pounded one another until a decision was at last given in favor of Hays. The ring was then, and had been for years, in bad repute. The champion in 1849 was Parker. Bill Perry, the "Tipton Slasher," claimed the throne in 1850. He was beaten in 1851 by Broome, but Perry was again champion in 1853, owing to the refusal of Broome to fight and his final retirement.

The memorable fight between Heenan and Sayers took place at Farnborough in 1860. The colors of Heenan were the American flag, and those of Sayers the English flag. After the thirty seventh round the referee left his post, when, according to the friends of Sayers, Heenan was defeated; but Heenan's admirers assert that the English champion was beaten. There were four more rounds, after which the ring was broken. As in the case of Tom Crib, England went wild over Sayers, and was presented with testimonials and money that made him comparatively well off. Sayers retired from the ring after the fight and the championship honors were borne in succession by Hurst, Mace, King and Wormald.

HER LIFE FOR HER SIN.

An Owen Sound Woman's Fatal Attempt to Hide Her Shame.

OWEN SOUND, Nov. 17.—Mrs. Annie Jackson, wife of Joseph Jackson, who left her, and is said to have married another woman four years ago, took sick about the first of last week. The doctor in attendance questioned her closely as to what medicine she had been taking. She refused to tell him, but at last told him where he would find the bottles. He found and smelled them and thus ascertained that she had been taking medicine to procure an abortion.

A warrant was issued for the arrest of Malcolm Blue on the charge of administering poison with intent to procure miscarriage.

Mrs. Jackson died yesterday and Blue was arrested about 18 miles from here last night.

An inquest was held last evening but was adjourned until after the post mortem examination to morrow morning.

Sandwich.

Sirs,—For five years I suffered from lumbago and could get no relief until I used Hagyard's Yellow Oil, and must say I find no better remedy for it.

JOHN DESMARAIS, Sandwich, Ont.

In raiding a slaughter house in Chicago for carrying on its business inside the city the police appear to have discovered a new industry. The place was extensively engaged in killing old horses and pickling them for general consumption. Many persons have often wondered what becomes of deceased equines, and this may partially answer the question.

There was great excitement among the Anarchists of Chicago last night and all sorts of threats were made against the city. Mary Greif, the 21 year old daughter of Anarchist Thos. Greif, proprietor of the Anarchist rendezvous, died yesterday afternoon and the reds say her death was directly due to the fear and the hail made by the police when the Anarchist meeting was broken up.

John Morrison, a well known farmer of the town line of Egremont and Arthur, had a boil which was troubled with an abscess on his neck and while lancing this, about two weeks ago, some of the matter discharged got into a scratch on his hand. Although the hand and arm became swollen and painful nothing serious was anticipated and a doctor was not consulted until too late to save his life.

A Popular Physician.

The popular physician is unassuming, pleasant and successful in treating disease. Such an one is Burdock Blood Bitters—unassuming—only a dollar a bottle—pleasant, agreeable in taste,—successful in nine cases out of ten. In truth it may be said B. B. B. is the popular physician to the people, a tried and trusted family friend in all diseases of the stomach, liver, bowels and blood.

A case was tried at the assizes which conveys its lesson to teamsters. A Cobourg lady was out driving last winter when she met a man driving a load of hay. She turned out as far as she could and called the man to do the same, but he refused to deviate his course from the centre of the road. He drove on in spite of the protests of the lady and collided with the sutter overturning it. The occupants were thrown out and severely injured. The man was brought to trial at the fall assizes and fined $300. Some teamsters, especially in the winter time seem to consider that they have a lease on the road, and behave in a shameful manner to the people they meet especially if they happen to be ladies. With this Cobourg case as a precedent the law will not deal lightly with such offenders.

Perfect Purity.

Perfect purity of the blood is essential to good health. Burdock Blood Bitters will purify the blood and remove all effete matter. B. B. B. cures all blood diseases from a common pimple to the worst scrofulous sore.

"Like Magic,"

THE effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Colds, Coughs, Croup, and Sore Throat are, in most cases, like magic, when the Pectoral is administered. In strengthening the vocal organs, allaying irritation, and preventing the inroads of Consumption, in every stage of that dread disease, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for coughs, and to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. G. Conley, Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best pectoral qualities of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, it being more saleable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great merits was considered unequaled."—R. B. Drake, M. D., Bellet, Kans.

"My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skilful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine; saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she coughed herself free from the phlegm, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until assured she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers."—G. G. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

American elevators are being introduced into the baronial halls of England. There is one at Blenheim, which the Duchess of Marlborough is not too proud to operate herself, and it will lift almost anything except the mortgages on the place. Other swell houses are being similarly equipped, and it will not be long before it is the rule for ladies, when they leave the dining room, to take the elevator route to the drawing-room. And what a convenience that will be to fat, old, two-bottle men, when it becomes necessary to "join the ladies," or to be taken up to their own bed-rooms.

The Best of Rock Salt, for Stock,

Read what Prof. Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says regarding proper ways of salting stock:—"Dairy cattle should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has convinced me that when cows are denied salt for a period of even one week they will yield from ½ to 1½ per cent. less milk, and that of an inferior quality. Such milk will, on an average, turn sour in twenty four hours sooner than milk drawn from the same or similar cows receiving salt every day; all other conditions of treatment being equal."

THE only chemically pure Salt ever discovered, analysed 99 84-100 Pure Salt. All kinds of stock will do better where this Salt is used; one ton will go four times as far as common salt, hence it is cheaper. It is the finest Salt in the world for the preservation of all kinds of meat, all the large packers are using it. It is sold cheaper than any other lump salt. We guarantee this Salt as advertised. Make a trial and you will always use it; we have in stock fine and coarse, at

CHAPTER XXII.

"A lady wishes to see you, Mademoiselle Olympe."

"But I am so ill to see any one Madame Lemoine! I am indeed," replied a startled voice. "Say for me, that I am too ill"

"The lady says she will not detain you a minute, mademoiselle. A friend of hers wishes to take lessons in English. She is very rich," whispered Madame Lemoine, throwing her round face within the door. "Think, my dear, how much you need money, and don't send her away."

The sick English girl leant back wearily in her poor arm chair, and sighed.

"I will call on the lady," she said. "Do, my good Madame Lemoine, ask her for her address. My poor garret is not a place to receive ladies in"

But Madame Lemoine, propitiated by the five-franc piece bestowed on the little Gustave by Mrs Gunning, was not to be driven from her resolve.

"What matters it how shabby the room is," said she, "if the lady has a fancy to see it? She won't expect to find a poor teacher in a palace. Here she is!—she is coming up stairs! Now you must see her, Mademoiselle Olympe!

The round Breton visage of Madame Lemoine disappeared hastily, as she set the door wide open, and Mrs Gunning in some trepidation, found herself obliged to come forward.

"Olive Varcoe," she said, as truly as I have a woman's heart within me, so truly do I believe that you are an innocent girl, and that you are taking the blame of the deed upon yourself, from some overwrought notion of love and gratitude."

One wan hand fell down from the pale face,—one instant the large dark eyes, swimming in tears, gazed on her in doubt and terror; then both weak arms drooped forward, and sobbing piteously, Olive fell upon Mrs. Gunning's neck.

"Do not betray me!" she cried. "I am too weak to bear it. I have taken upon myself a task beyond my strength. I am dying under it; oh, Mrs Gunning, I am dying under it!"

"My poor girl," whispered Mrs. Gunning, soothingly, "you are not dying. We will soon get you well again."

Olive did not heed this, but, clinging passionately to the homely figure of her comforter, she reiterated, "You will not betray me?"

"Betray you?" said Mrs Gunning. "No; but being innocent, what have you to fear?"

"I am so weak, said Olive, holding out her thin hands. "I fear, were they to take me now, I should not have courage to be silent, and then I should have suffered all this in vain. Oh, I cannot bear that thought! I must save him the anguish, the shame that I have borne for him. I must bear it to the end. I must have my reward."

She wrung her hands together, while over her thin, pale face there spread a burning flush of crimson. With tears upon her cheek, Mrs Gunning stooped and kissed her.

"My poor child," said she, "you are wrong, altogether wrong. This is Quixotic madness."

"No, no," exclaimed Olive, it is life or death to me; it is no madness. Oh, Mrs. Gunning, you have discovered me! You will not be heartless and cruel! You will not tell any one that you have found me?"

The trembling of her small hands as she held them forth, the wild look in her eyes, showed Mrs. Gunning she was too ill to bear arguments, or to endure any new terrors.

"I will do all you wish," said Mrs. Gunning, soothingly. "Now, tell me, what have you been doing to get so ill?"

"I don't know," replied Olive, feebly. "I have been very poor, and sometimes——"

She stopped, and, being weak, her tears fell fast in spite of her efforts to restrain them.

"My poor child! my poor child!" said Mrs. Gunning, "don't cry so bitterly. Good heavens! what a set of fools we have all been!—a poor little thing like you. My dear, I'll take care of you, and we'll set everything to rights now; we will, indeed."

But Olive was too ill to listen. The low fever, that had been wearing away her strength for many days, overcame her completely now, and she lay pale, speechless, and exhausted, with her best head, like a broken flower, resting on the kind bosom that held her.

Mrs. Gunning laid her on the little bed that stood close by, and sitting down by her side, remained a minute in deep thought. And the result of her meditation was, that she must find Charles Vigo.

"Ah! love is a grand thing," said Mrs. Gunning to herself, as she wiped her eyes. "Love gave that young man sense and clear-sightedness to see the truth. He'll help me to take care of her—he'll tell me what to do. I'm a lady myself without Tobias, and I mean not tell him off this just yet. I hope not the least idea whether I should go straight to the police, and tell 'em what I think, or whether it would be wiser to hold my tongue. Upon my word, this is an awful responsibility!"

Mrs. Gunning felt herself grow hot and then cold, as she reflected on the difficult position in which she had placed herself by coming to see Olive. But as she looked down on the slight figure, and wan face, that lay so weak and helpless before her, she did not repent. Then, as the poor, hunted girl, growing more composed, opened her large feverish eyes, and strove to thank her for her kindness, Mrs. Gunning took her little hand between both hers, and bent over her.

"Listen, my dear," she said; "don't agitate yourself in answering me, but tell me, if you can, where I shall find Charles Vigo—that good, noble fellow, who had the heart and courage to stand your friend when all the world fell from you."

Olive grasped Mrs Gunning's hand feverishly, and her eyes grew wild and bright.

"Yes, yes," said she, "he was a friend—a noble friend; but I could not let him be slandered any more for my sake. When I quitted Ireland, I resolved never again to let him know where I wandered. Is he not at home? Where is he? What is he doing?"

Her wild eagerness startled Mrs. Gunning.

"He is not at home, my dear," she replied; "but I cannot tell you where he is."

"Oh, I guess what he is doing," said Olive, a look of deadly fear passing over her face. "I know what his resolve was. Mrs Gunning it will kill me if he search out all this dreadful truth—it will kill me. Find him, bring him to me, that I may entreat him to have mercy."

She fixed her eyes on Mrs. Gunning's face in an agony of fevered prayer, and clasped her arms with her small burning hands.

"I will bring him, my dear, rely on that," said Mrs. Gunning. "Now tell me quietly, where was he when you heard from him last?"

"At home," replied Olive—"in Cornwall."

"And why did you not answer his letter?" continued Mrs Gunning. "Why deprive yourself of his help?"

"I would not trouble him any more," replied Olive in a broken voice. "Why should I put any of my burden upon him? I feared to cause him more sorrow. By his help I had found a home among kind people: but I was driven away—driven away!"

Here the tone changed to a wild whisper of fear and crouching down in terror, like a poor hunted creature, she hid her face on the pillow.

"Poor child," said Mrs. Gunning "don't tell me any more."

"Yes, yes," continued Olive, lifting her white face suddenly, "the rest is not much. I fled in the night. I walked a long, long way among the lonely mountains—that first made me ill; then I got on a canal boat, and so reached Bandon and Cork. Then I went to London."

She closed her eyes in weariness, and lay down again, as though the thoughts of her dreary, lonely journey were too much for her strength. But no, it was not of herself she was thinking.

"It was such a sad journey," she resumed, after a moment's rest had given her power to speak. "I was so sorry for them—my friends—fearing that they would be grieved and shamed through me. I was so sorry for Charles Vigo, thinking he would be blamed for helping me. And so, then——"

"And so, then?" said Mrs. Gunning, as the girl's white, parted lips ceased to speak, and there stole forth from her closed eyes large, silent tears.

"Then," said Olive, "as I sat alone in my little room in that great desert, London, I saw I had no right to make any other share the pain I had taken on myself; and I resolved I would never again vex another's roof with my presence. I would live alone, and earn my bread as I could."

"Oh, you poor little mad, loving child!" said Mrs. Gunning, and down upon Olive's white face rained the good lady's kindly tears. Olive took her hand, and kissed it.

"I stayed a long while in London," said the sweet, low voice, again; "I stayed till nearly all my money was gone. And I was driven away from those lodgings—through rain fears, perhaps—to another and another, till at last I thought I should be safer here; and I came over by the night boat, a deck passenger"

"Now, Heaven help me!" exclaimed Mrs. Gunning, "why have you borne all this?"

"I had been so wicked," said Olive, as passionate sobs broke from her very heart. "I had been so full of pride, of temper, of ingratitude, revenge; I had never thought of how they had borne with me, and cared for me, all my life long. Oh! what other way could I repay them, than by doing this?—what other way to make amends for all my willfulness? And I am so glad to prove that I have some love in me—some gratitude——"

Nature could do no more; it had fought long against the fever in her veins, but now it was paramount, and as her clinging hands dropped helpless from Mrs. Gunning's arm, as did Olive fall upon her pillow, white, faint and weary.

In very pity, kindly Mrs. Gunning resolved she should not speak another word. There was one question she had been careful not to ask. Olive's weakness would not have borne that, and tenderness for her would have sealed the lips of clever Mrs. Gunning, even if shrewdness and consideration for Tobias had not kept them closed.

"No, my responsibility is heavy enough as it is," she said to herself, dolefully. "I must be careful not to add to it by bearing any kind of confession which it might be my instant duty to divulge. I may be a soft-hearted simpleton, but I have no right to compromise Tobias. Ah! I wish I had a tithe of his talent. At all events, I have sense enough, for his sake, to steer clear of that one dangerous topic. Not that the little thing would tell me," she continued, looking down on the closed eyes, and small resolute, ivory face, that, all scrunched and shivering in its fitful fever, lay before her. "No, it is my belief, wild horses would not tear it from her. And now, that she has suffered so much, it would be a pity indeed if——"

Mrs. Gunning stopped, then went on again resolutely.

"Yes," said she, "it would be a pity. I'll say it again. Justice! stuff! Nobody knows what justice is in this world. Will the brave, enduring little creature get it? No, of course not; and I must confess she never gave it either. What a fiery passionate little mortal it was! Ah, well, there is not much fire, much passion left in her now; her bitter trials have softened away all the hard, sharp edges in her strange character."

Thus Mrs. Gunning soliloquized busying herself the while in many kind offices. Prompt, quiet, yet energetic, she had soon made arrangements for the sick girl's comfort. In doing this, money streamed quickly through her generous fingers, and even the thought of Tobias's anger could not stop the flow. At last, when the doctor had come and gone, when a table was heaped with dainties, and a placid Sister of Mercy took her seat by the bedside, Mrs Gunning thrust herself into her bonnet and shawl, and with a troubled countenance for the ill-treatment she was showing Tobias, in keeping all this a secret from him, she betook herself to the marital abode.

For eight days the doctor considered Mademoiselle Olympe Valsey in danger of death, and during this time Mrs. Gunning mystified her husband, and angered the eloquent nose into snappishness, by going, day by day, to that poor garret in that poor quarter of Paris. Here she sat by Olive's bed, and heard the wild murmured ravings of fever; and, as she listened, Mrs. Gunning felt immensely grateful to the builders of the Tower of Babel.

"If it was not for that blessed differences of speech," said she, "and that happy conceit which won't let French people learn English, what would become of me?"

She bathed Olive's temples, she kissed her face, and soon the large dark eyes learned to smile when she came, the parched lips ceased to murmur incoherently, the little, restless hands lay still.

"She'll do," said the doctor. And Mrs. Gunning felt as grateful as if her husband had forgiven her, and his nose had said all manner of kind things, instead of turning her heart upside down all day long, through continued snappishness.

Lieutenant Chadwick possessed an inquiring disposition, hence it is not surprising that he gazed with benign curiosity on the altered countenance of his friend Damerel; a countenance so sour and dolorous that the freshest chaff—the very latest thing out in chaff—failed to enliven it. Sitting in a brown study, with no company but himself and his cigar, Lieutenant Chadwick brought the powers of his brain to bear upon the mystery, and discovered it.

"He's jealous," said he, "jealous of me! By Jove! that's it. Poor Vivy! he shouldn't have introduced me to his friends—a fellow like me, with some life and conversation in him. He is rather a dead-weight himself, is poor Vivy. Nevertheless, he'll carry the day. I can't marry, you know," continued Mr. Chadwick, spectrophising his boots with great earnestness. "I've got no money; he has. What chance have I against a fellow with a place in Devonshire, and six horses in the stable doing nothing?—a fellow who orders in the most expensive cigars by the box, and never wears his gloves twice. And here am I, looking upon a five-pound note as an object of curiosity, and always wondering why the House don't pass an Act, ordering tailors to give the British subalterns unlimited credit. Oh, the thing won't do, you know! I give it up magnanimously. There are five or six brothers in that family; the girl will have very little money. And of course, if I can't keep my wife—on her own money—in a proper manner, I won't marry. I resign, at once. I'll go and put poor Damerel out of his pain. I can understand what he feels, having a fellow like me pitted against him. Poor Vivy!"

Part of this was serious, and part chaff, for Mr. Chadwick was so accustomed to that light article, that he chaffed himself, and rather enjoyed it. And now, flinging the end of his cigar in the fire, he went to his friend's room, his mind filled with the most benevolent intentions, and forthwith slapped him paternally on the back.

"Vivy, old fellow," said he, "you are jealous; don't deny it."

Much astonished, Vivian Damerel turned hastily.

"Jealous!" he exclaimed; "nothing of the kind, Chadwick; but I am very uneasy."

"Then don't be uneasy any longer," said Chadwick; "I'll settle it for you."

"You, Chadwick!" cried Vivian, eagerly. "What do you know about the matter? Who is the fellow she meets?"

There was great confidence between Vivian and Chadwick, and the latter knew that his friend had set all his hopes on Florian Langley; but in his haste, Vivian had now said more than he intended. Both young men saw this at once, and Chadwick looked grave.

"Upon my life, old fellow," said he, "I thought you were a little mad at me for my intentions in that quarter, but now I see I am mistaken. And look here. I don't want to know any of Miss Langley's secrets; but if there is anything going on, you, as a friend, ought to warn her. She is very young, and she only has a silly boy and a blind mother to protect her. And Paris, you know, is a dozen of a place."

"My dear Chadwick, I am as miserable as I can well be," returned Vivian. "I feel all that more strongly than you, and yet I can do nothing. I am bound to secrecy; you must ask me no questions."

Damerel's evident distress filled Chadwick's good-natured head with schemes to relieve him, and the best and fittest was certainly to constitute himself a sort of body-guard to Miss Langley.

"Listen, old fellow," he resumed, "if you are bound to secrecy, you can't of course give her brother a hint; but if I see anything wrong, I can either lick the scamp myself, or I can set Herbert Langley to do it."

"But you never have seen anything wrong, Chadwick, have you?" asked Vivian.

"Never," replied Chadwick; "and I don't believe Florian Langley is the sort of girl——"

"Of course she isn't," interrupted Damerel; "nevertheless, there is something going on that I don't understand; and Mrs Langley knows nothing of it."

"Well, I was going to observe, that I'll call there every day, and follow her about like a dog, if you like," said Chadwick; "and when I have discovered who and what the fellow is, let him look out."

Mr. Chadwick finished his sentence with an expressive pantomime. There was something in his proposition that both pleased and displeased Damerel. It was true that he was very uneasy; he believed Florian to be the dupe of some adventurer, who was deceiving her with a tale of distress, or, worse still, a tale of love. And she, too young, too inexperienced, too pure to believe in evil, might have the whole happiness of her life marred through that false sense of honor on his part, which hindered him from speaking to her mother and brother. Under such circumstances would it not be well for Chadwick to set himself to discover the truth, and then, having something certain to go by, act as prudence and honor might dictate? The objection to this course lay in his fear of Florian's anger and contempt, should she discover a spy had been set on her actions. He spoke of this to Chadwick.

"My dear fellow," said he, "you will have nothing to do with it at all. The vials of her wrath will fall upon me. But the truth is, I shall not act the spy on her; that's not my plan. I shall dodge him. Let me see them together once, just to know the fellow—that's all. After that, my campaign is easy."

For some days after this Mr. Chadwick went in and out with an air of bustling importance. Brilliant in chaff, and bursting with untold secrets, he said not a word respecting his campaign until the fifth day. Then he entered Damerel's room late at night, and sat down silently, a grave and rather frightened air subduing his lively countenance.

"Well, Damerel," said he, "it's serious, and no mistake. They meet nearly every day."

Vivian's face flushed with jealous rage, and he exclaimed, impatiently, "Go on."

"You know," said Chadwick, "I have called there so often in the last five days, that I have made myself a nuisance; but nothing came of that. In pursuance of my plan, I have had the impudence to call at all hours. By that means I discovered she was always out at three o'clock. You know the stand of cabs at the corner? Well, I got into one. 'Where to?' says the man. 'Nowhere,' I answer; 'just stop here in your rank till I tell you to move.' Man thinks me mad, but lets me get into his shaky old vehicle, and keeps his eye on me from the box. "No pistols, nor poison, nor any of that nonsense,' says he, 'in my cab, if you please. If you want to kill yourself, go to the river.' 'What's the odds to you whether I stew my brains out or not?' I ask. 'A deal of odds; you'd make such a mess,' says the old fellow. That amused me, and I tried a bit of chaff in return, but could not get on—broke down in my French, you know. All at once I see her—comes out of the house by herself. I shrink into nothing. She passes by with her eye upon the cabs, and chooses one with a good horse—those Irish girls know a horse. In she get then I pull at the coat-tails of the old cabby. 'You saw that lady?' 'Yes.' 'Then follow, and don't lose sight of her.' Cabby grins, and off we go. And a precious long way, too, we go. At last her cab pulls up, and then I see coming towards it a tall fellow—quite a swell, I assure you,—who gets through a crowd like a prize fighter, opens the door, gives her his hand, and leads her off."

Lieutenant Chadwick paused to take breath, and gazed at his friend, who, with head bent forward on his hands, seemed lost in painful thought. But at the sudden silence he looked up, saying savagely between his teeth, "The miserable scoundrel! Go on, Chadwick! What are you stopping for?"

"I didn't stop—I went on," said Chadwick. "I slipped out of the cab, and followed them. Keeping at a good distance, I saw them walk up and down the Boulevard, then take a seat beneath one of the big trees. It was raining, but they didn't heed the rain, though it scattered the nursemaids right and left. And I was glad of it, as it gave me an opportunity of pulling up the collar of my coat, slouching my hat over my ears, and otherwise making a Guy of myself. The rain also excused me standing under a tree pretty near to them, and I wasn't afraid to do this, as she was so absorbed and so agitated that she never looked up. My dear fellow, I felt pretty considerably mean, I can tell you, as I found myself playing the spy in this beastly, ungentlemanly way. And if the girl's mother wasn't blind, and if you weren't spooey on her, I vow I would not move a finger to stop her from running away with this swell pickpocket. No, on my word now, I would not."

"Chadwick, will you drive me mad!" exclaimed Damerel. "Go on,—go straight through."

"There isn't much more to tell," said Chadwick, "and that——Look here now, you won't think me a downright cad, will you?"

Damerel's answer is not on record; it was very short, and rather strong.

"You won't?" said Chadwick. "All right, old fellow. Well, then, it was, in fact the fault of the wind; she wind blew a scrap of their conversation towards me, and my ear caught it."

"Yes,—well?" exclaimed Vivian.

"And I heard him say, 'This suspense is terrible! What can we do?'"

"Good heavens! then he spoke English. He is an Englishman?" cried Damerel.

"Or Irish," said Chadwick. "There was a slight ring in his voice not quite English I thought. I could not hear a word Miss Langley said, but I heard him implore her to meet him again, and I know by her face she said, 'Yes.' She was pale and frightened—I saw that; and after her lover had put her in the fiacre—he is her lover, my dear fellow, don't deceive yourself about that—she leant back on the seat, and shed tears. The gentleman went off down the Boulevards at a rapid pace, and I discharged my cabby, and plunged after him. He led me such a chase! He dived into quarters of Paris I had never seen; and, lastly, he gave me the slip, but where I cannot say. I floundered about for an hour looking for him; then quite exhausted, I retraced my steps to a civilized part of the town, dined, smoked a cigar, and came home. Now you must decide what we had better do."

"I cannot see that I have any right to interfere further," said Vivian Damerel, gloomily. "Miss Langley will listen to no advice of mine. Do what you will yourself, Chadwick."

"Confound the whole thing!" exclaimed that bewildered marine. "It's a dose of a fix altogether only I know I should be awfully obliged to any fellow—supposing it was my sister—for any hint that might be the means of saving her from perhaps a miserable marriage. So if you leave it to me, Damerel, I shall give young Langley a hint, that he had better get his sister out of Paris."

"Wait a week before you do that," broke in Vivian, gloomily. "Meanwhile, I will try and get a sight of this fellow. What is he like?"

"Like a gentleman—undeniably like a gentleman," replied Chadwick; "and good-looking as—as the deuce."

"See here, Chadwick!" exclaimed Vivian, in a more cheerful voice, "it has just struck me that your aunt, Mrs. Gunning is a sensible woman."

"Come now, no chaff about my aunt," returned Chadwick; "I am fond of her. I don't deny she is clever; she is a first-rate interpreter."

"I am serious," said Damerel; "it is you that are chaffing. I think, Chadwick if you were to speak together in confidence, telling her you had been an

UNCALLED FOR ABUSE.

THE public school board of this town has received a great deal of abuse lately, much of which is undeserved. We are under the impression that the present trustees discharge their duties as efficiently as any board the town has ever had, and why they should be unfairly criticised, we fail to see. During the past few years a great deal of interest has been taken in school trustee elections, and, therefore, a superior class of candidates offer themselves for election, and we venture to say that the men who occupy seats at the board at the present time transact the business more satisfactorily and with as much economy as did any of their predecessors. The chairman of this year's board has frequently to leave his business at different places so as to be in town to attend the meetings. Who will say that this member does not try to do his duty?

In the recent scandals at the school every sane man admits that the trustees acted with discretion in the matter, and did not do an injustice to anyone. We like to see fair play, and we utterly detest misrepresentation. Had we space at our disposal we would go more fully into details, but we think the ratepayers will judge the trustees by their actions, not by idle gossip.

MR. HAUN RESIGNS.

Our readers will be surprised and sorry to learn that Mr. R. T. Haun, who since its establishment, had charge of the Orangeville agency of the Bank of Hamilton has tendered his resignation of the management of the agency. Mr. Haun's urbanity has made him very popular with the customers of the bank and his unswerving fidelity to the interests of the institution has gained for him the good will and admiration of those in authority over him. It is pleasing, therefore, to learn that the qualities which have enabled him to make the Orangeville agency the most important one outside of Hamilton will still be at the service of the bank. We understand from the local officers that the cashier, who has been made aware of Mr. Haun's intentions, has asked him to afford to his successor, from time to time as he requires it, assistance and advice. Mr. Haun, though anxious for a thorough rest for the present, has acceded to this request, so that his wide experience and mature judgment will still be available to the bank. We regret to learn that the condition of Mr. Haun's health is his principal reason for temporarily retiring from active work in the bank. The close application which proper discharge of his duties to the bank and the performance of his work as county treasurer have rendered necessary, has told upon his health, but he feels that a complete rest will restore it. His friends, whose name is legion, will join, with THE SUN in expressing the earnest hope that his expectations may be realized.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

WARD aspirants are lying low, but they will move themselves in due time. Mr. W. Still is out for the North.

MUNICIPAL gossip is in order now, but candidates are not cropping up as quickly as one would expect. In a week or two, however, they will all come with a rush.

UP to the hour of going to press no candidates have announced themselves for the deputy-reeveship of this town. Ald. Youmans, Gillespie, Ketchum and Fiddis have their eyes open and a great fight may take place.

OUR election representative had a conversation with ex Reeve Braiden the other day, and he stated that he would not take the reeveship of Amaranth again for $500 a year. Ex-Reeves Gillespie, Jelly, and Deputy-reeve Johnston are saying nothing, but sawing wood. There's no telling what may turn up on nomination day.

IT is altogether probable that Deputy-reeve Endacott will be reeve of this town next year. Mr. E. has been a first class representative and deserves a higher position than he at present occupies. We don't think his old opponent, Mr. John Kearns, will re-enter municipal life at present, as he says he cannot find time to prepare for a contest.

MR. ELI DRIVER is out for the office of councillor for the township of Amaranth, and if push and oratory counts for anything Eli will legislate at the beautiful little village of Laurel next year. Councillor Elijah Hamilton aspires for something higher and Councillor Turner, it is rumored, is satisfied with his present position. Mr. Dudgeon, we are told, to use a slang phrase, "is not in it."

A GREAT municipal race is on in Mono between Mr. James Snell and Deputy reeve Geo. Island. Both gentlemen are desirous of being chief magistrate of the banner township, and the contest will be close, consequently, betting on the result is even. The candidates are canvassing for all they are worth and a great deal of hand shaking is indulged in. This election will be watched with interest.

THERE may be an "exciting" battle for the mayoralty of Orangeville after all. It is known on every side that Reeve Lindsay aspires to the higher office, but Henry Stanley Webber, the champion Canadian lightweight, may don the gloves and enter the arena. We have not heard Mr. Webber say that he will be a candidate for the office of mayor, but the two things the editor never stakes his capital on are politics and horse races. We profit by the example of others.

The caucus of the House of Commons has been notified to be in readiness by Jan. 5, which would lead one to believe that the next session of Parliament will be an early one.

THE COUNTY COUNCIL.

Reminder of the last Session's Proceedings.

WEDNESDAY'S SESSION.

All the members of the council were in their places at 10 o'clock this morning. The minutes of the first day's proceedings were read and adopted. The presentment of the grand jury at the last assizes was read and referred to the Finance committee. The principal clause of this document was the recommendation to increase the salary of Mrs. Sutherland, matron of the jail, by $50. Mr. Hamilton attacked the report by saying several of the grand jurors told him they had never heard a word about this business until it was read before the judge. At a later stage the Finance committee reported against raising the salary.

In the afternoon Mr. McGhee brought in the report of the Education committee, recommending the payment of several accounts.

Mr. Gallaugher, on behalf of the assessment committee, reported against changing the time for assessing, and the report was adopted.

Mr. Endacott submitted the Finance committee's report, which was adopted. The second clause of the report, re the grand jury's recommendation to increase the jail matron's salary, advised that no action be taken at present.

Calvin Peters' appeal for refund of fine and costs imposed by P. M. Pettitello for an infraction of the peddlers' license by law, was considered, but that's about all was done.

On motion of Mr. Jelly the county treasurer was instructed not to issue peddlers' licenses to a company, but to individuals only. An adjournment was made until Thursday morning.

THURSDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The councillors' chairs were all occupied when Warden Allen called order this 10 A. M. Several reports were read and adopted.

Mr. Hamilton moved, seconded by Mr. Gallaugher, that an order in favor of the warden for $100, as a slight acknowledgement of his services as warden during the year, be issued. Mr. Allen protested, but the members forced him to take it and—he did it. A vote of thanks to the warden was also passed, after which the council adjourned sine die.

MARSVILLE.

Mr. John Cock recently paid $4,000 for the Burr farm of 100 acres on the 8th con. of East Garafraxa, which a few years ago cost Burr Bros. $5 450.

OBITUARY.—With deep regret we record the death of Isabella Preston, wife of Mr. John Preston, clerk of East Garafraxa, which sad event occurred at her residence on Saturday last. Deceased had been ailing for some months back and her death was not unexpected. Everything that tender hands and loving hearts could suggest was done, but to no avail. Mrs. Preston was 49 years old and was a lady of many kindly qualities of hand and heart. The remains were laid to rest in Price's Corners cemetery on Monday, a large number of sorrowing relatives and friends being present to pay a last token of respect and esteem. To Mr. Preston and the bereaved ones we do tender our cordial sympathies.

HE'S LEARNED A LESSON.—Martin Hawes, a farmer living near here, has learned a lesson, but it has cost him a great deal of money. This is the way it was done: Last spring a glib tongued agent called at the farmer's place and told him he had six patent harrows at Orton station worth $27.50 apiece, and offered Hawes one of them if he would keep them till the agent would call to deliver them to other farmers. Hawes jumped at the chance and signed an agreement to that effect. Several weeks later another agent called with a note that Hawes had agreed to buy the harrows at $27.50 each, and asked for the full price, $187.50. The farmer was surprised, but he had to pay all the money just the same, and his experience cost a heap. He still has the infernal harrows and they are not worth $4 each. When will people quit expecting to get something for nothing? Some never will.

HOCKLEY.

GRAND CONCERT.—A grand concert will take place in the Orange hall here on Monday evening next, and all should attend. A choice program of speeches, music, etc., has been prepared for the occasion, and a good time is promised. The chair will be taken at 8 o'clock. Admission 25 cts., children 15 cts. Proceeds in aid of St. James' church.

CHURCH OPENING.—The opening of St. James' church here for divine worship will take place on Sunday next, Dec 6. The following services will be held: Administration of holy communion, 9:30, a. m.; morning prayer and sermon, 11 a. m.; childrens prayer and sermon, 1:30 p. m.; Litany service and sermon, 2:30 p. m.; thanksgiving service and sermon 4:30 p. m.; evening prayer and sermon 6:30 p. m. Revs. Henderson of Orangeville, Morley of Tullamore and Rural Dean Ball of Bond Head are expected to be present and assist. We hope to see a large turnout on this occasion and help the good work on.

SOL WHITE'S crusade is creating not much excitement, but heaps of fun, says the Toronto World. A gentleman from Windsor says that Sol is being treated with great derision in Western Ontario, and this only bears out the accounts received through the press. He is being made a laughing stock and does not seem to realise it. More than this, he is head over heels in debt and has been concerned in some queer real estate deals. All around people seem to be jumping upon Sol and he has little sympathy. A few nights ago he held a meeting at South Woodsley to advocate annexation. He was the only annexationist there, and his loneliness was made more painful when, as he rose to speak, a curtain at the other end of the hall was pulled aside, revealing a cartoon of Sol riding an ass labelled "Annexation."

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—The attention of all sufferers is directed to these well-known remedies, for they possess conspicuous advantages for a safe and reliable aid in all those emergencies to which travellers, emigrants and sailors are so especially liable. They have been largely patronized by wayfarers by land and sea, and, in fact, by all classes of the community, to their very great advantage. The Pills are beyond all doubt one of the most effective remedies ever discovered for cases of obstinate constipation, costiveness, indigestion and colic, complaints which are engendered by exposure and irregular feeding. The Ointment will be found of the very greatest service in cases of piles, rheumatism, erysipelas, and all kinds of local affections.

PERSONAL.

Miss Hattie Hewitt of Orwell is a guest at Ald. Youmans'.

Mr. S. Sowden of Belmaghow has commenced to study law and has secured a set in Meyer Walsh's office.

Rev. A. C. Watt, the popular pastor of St. John's church, Mono Mills, gave THE SUN a pleasant call on Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Hy. Brown, Kingston, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Davies, Kerwood, are guests at the residence of Mr. James Pierce, South ward.

Mr. R. T. Haun, manager of the Bank of Hamilton, has been confined to his room for the past several days, suffering from the effects of a severe cold.

Mr. Eri Whaley of the firm of Whaley, Royce & Co., Toronto, took in the band concert here on Friday evening. Eri was leader of the Orangeville band several years ago.

Mr. W. J. Reid has returned from Manitoba after spending nearly eight months in the neighborhood of Carberry. He brought samples of wheat with him to show what devastation the frost had made of the crops in that locality. The samples are no better than inferior tailings and are disposed of at 25 cts per bushel.

Mr. Robert Kyle returned on Saturday from a four months' visit to his brother at Hartney and friends at Millie, Man. Mr. K. is delighted with the country and says he intends returning next year. Mr. W. J. Price, formerly of this town, is doing a rushing business at Millie, a new town which is booming. Mr. Kyle's brother, who accompanied him on the trip, was so well suited with the country that he remained there.

ATLHONE.

(Too late for last week.)

RE ENGAGED.—Mr. Wm. McKenna has been re-engaged in the Loretto school at an increased salary.

GOING HOME.—Mr. Wm. Marshall formerly an old Orangeville pupil, but who has been teaching near Athlone this year, has been engaged to teach at home, Horning's Mills.

REPAIRED.—There was no school at Loretto for a few weeks lately on account of extensive repairs going on in the school. Mr. McKenna ought to have a comfortable place for the winter, now.

WEDDING BELLS.—Mr. Michael Ryan of the Fortunes and Miss King of Colgan were married on Tuesday last, the 17th inst., by Rev. Father Kilcullen of St. James': We wish the young couple prosperity and happiness.

HOTEL RENTED.—Mr. Dennis Prior has rented the hotel and fifty acres of land from Mr. John Kelly of Loretto. This hotel has been idle last summer as the present occupant, Mr. Chas. Colliton, has no license. We wish the new proprietor success.

REMOVING.—There is a rumor that Mrs. Gamble of Loretto is about to retire from active business and remove to Toronto. Mrs. Gamble is a woman, who is universally respected in this neighborhood and we are certain that all would regret her loss.

HORNING'S MILLS.

(Crowded out last week.)

SUCCESS, CHARLIE!—We notice that our old friend Mr. Charles E. Noble, formerly of Shelburne, has opened up a new hardware store in Dundalk. Charlie is a competent salesman and we wish him success.

STORMING.—At present writing we are having a severe snow storm in this locality. About a week ago we thought we had sleighing well nigh established, but between the melting of the beautiful and the recent rains, the roads are almost impassable.

BANNS.—A wedding is on the run in town at present—more to follow ....A Hossack is needed in Horning's Mills.... We have two butchers, three or four flour and feed stores, but no barber and no jeweller, both of whom are badly needed. There is also a good opening for a lawyer.

MUNICIPAL.—As Horning's Mills is the chief town in this township, we assume the responsibility of keeping the readers of THE SUN well posted on the municipal probs. until after the next election. We hear of no one likely to oppose the reeve as yet, and the probabilities are that he will be re-elected by acclamation. The 2nd deputy will be ditto. As for councillors we will not venture an opinion just yet.

SHELBURNE.

(Free Press and Economist.)

COLT KILLED.—Mr. Thos. McMannaman of Melancthon had a colt killed by falling into a straw pen on Sunday last. A cow that fell into the same pen on Sunday was badly hurt but will recover.

HELLO!—The Bell Telephone Co. have put in twenty-five telephones in Shelburne, and there are contracts for six more, which will probably be put in this week. The line is now open through to Winston. An office was opened in Priceville last Friday.

TRUANT OFFICER.—The Shelburne council will at its next meeting appoint a truant officer. Such an officer is very much needed in Shelburne as there are a number of boys who need looking after, who spend their time playing around the streets when they who uld be at school.

SUDDEN DEATH.—Last Friday morning Mr Case of Elora, between 70 and 80 years of age, was visiting his son, Mr. Benj. Case, lot 24, con 5, N. E., Melancthon, when he was seen to fall forward into a fire over which some pig feed was being boiled. He was immediately lifted out but life was extinct. The fire had not injured him to any extent, his flesh being but slightly burned and his hair singed. He had intended returning to his home Saturday morning. The corpse was taken to Elora ferurial.

ARRESTED AND THEN GOT AWAY.—A burglary was committed in Stayner on Thursday, the 12th inst., a woollen factory being robbed, and Constable McDonald eventually located the burglar at Horning's Mills and arrested him. The following Saturday the fellow was brought before the mayor and the case was adjourned till Monday, but in the meantime the burglar bad, to use the language of the local paper, "burgled his way, it is supposed with his finger nail, through the cement floor and stone foundation, and had left for parts unknown." The Sun also says: "We want him, if it is only to make him cart back the hole he burrowed through the lock-up—our new lock-up of which he was the first inmate." However, that institution have the finest city, and have recovered the watch, clothes and two trunks which he stole.

A Good Verdict.

Sirs,—I have great reason to speak well of your B. B. Bitters. I have taken 6 bot. the last for myself and family and find that for loss of appetite and weakness it has no equal. It cures sick headache, purifies the blood and will not fail when used. I heartily recommend it to all wanting a pure medicine.

"At last, I can eat a good square meal without its distressing me!" was the grateful exclamation of one whose appetite had been restored by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, after years of dyspeptic misery. A teaspoonful of this extract before each meal sharpens the appetite.

DAN WHALE CONFESSES.

Threatened by Mrs. Whale With Revelations Should Proceed Be Taken Against Her—Whale's Confession, as Declared Into Writing.

STRATFORD, Nov. 27.—Daniel Whale of Mitchell, a former Toronto hotelkeeper, who is now serving a life sentence for killing his wife, has made a confession. Whale's confession in effect is that on Nov 20, 1886, he he abscondition with his son in law Selden, and the latter threw him out of the Royal hotel. Some days after, during the course of a quarrel, Mrs. Whale had twitted him about being thrown out of the hotel. He said he became very angry and told her if she ever mentioned the matter to him again he would kill her. On the morning of the terrible tragedy Mrs. Whale again mentioned the affair to him in a scoring manner. Being under the influence of liquor he became so enraged that he seized an empty ale bottle and struck her a powerful blow on the head. This was the blow that drove the skull in and finally produced death. He then threw the bottle behind the wood pile in the yard, where it has been found since.

J. McK. Barclay was married to Kate O'Neil on Oct. 18 by the archdeacon at Guelph. A day or two afterwards he was arrested on the complaint of the girl's mother and brother that he had a wife living. He was committed to trial and the newly married wife was taken away by her mother. It appeared that some years since he had been living with a woman, who is now married in the Northwest. The County Attorney made diligent efforts to procure evidence of the alleged marriage, but without success, and to-day Barclay was discharged. Some five weeks in jail was pretty hard on the alleged bigamist without definite proof of his guilt, and now he is out and his wife, it is said by her mother, won't return to him.

FROM FIR AWAY.—THE SUN receives many orders from distant places for printing, and our work always gives excellent satisfaction. This week we filled an order for a citizen of Moose Jaw, N. W. T.

ASSIGNED.—Mr. F. A. Cousins, fruit and confection merchant of this town, has made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors. D. B. Brown is the assignee. Mr. John S. May, tea dealer of Orangeville, has assigned to Mr. Geo. Irwin.

DEAD.—Mr. James Richmond, aged 62, an old resident of this town, died at the residence of his son, on Margaret street, on Monday. Mr. Richmond was born in England, but emigrated to Canada many years ago. The remains were laid at rest in the Town cemetery on Wednesday afternoon.

RECOVERING.—Several days ago Mr. Geo. Bennett of Laurel was given a bottle of ammonia by a Shelburne druggist in mistake for whiskey. Mr. B. took a drink from the bottle and in a few minutes was rendered unconscious. He had a pretty tough time in pulling through, but we are glad to say that he has almost recovered from the effects of the dose.

A BRAKEMAN INJURED.— Brakeman Henderson, employed on the C. P. R. way freight between Owen Sound and Toronto, had the fingers of his right hand crushed between the bumpers of two cars at the station here on Thursday last. Dr. Henry dressed the injured limb and the man continued his journey to the city.

TRUE IT IS.—An exchange says. It often occurs to us in the solitary confinement of our sanctum that the people do not understand that with them rests a great deal whether their paper is bright, rich or newsy. If they would only, when anything of a local nature occurs, give us the particulars, what a treat of local matter we could dish up every week.

W. F. M. S.—Rev. W. A. Hunter of Erskine church, Toronto, will deliver a lecture in St. Andrew's church here on Friday evening, the 11th inst., in aid of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. Subject of the lecture will be announced next week and a silver collection will be taken up at the close. Lecture to commence at 8 o'clock.

McKIM—CROWE.—Mr. Wm. McKim of this town, registrar of the county of Dufferin, was married at Toronto on Wednesday to Miss Clara Crowe of that city. The Rev Chas. Fish, grand father of the bride, performed the ceremony. After the honeymoon trip to the States, Mr and Mrs. McKim will live in their own home on Mill street. SUNSHINE.

COMING. — The world-famed McGibeny Family of musicians will give one of their artistic entertainments in the town hall on Tuesday next the 8th. This is without doubt one of the best musical companies on the road, and those who fail to hear them will miss a treat of the richest kind. They played here a couple of years ago, and captivated the music loving people of Orangeville

OLD SUBSCRIBERS.—About this time every year many subscribers who have been taking THE SUN from its first issue call and renew their subscriptions. Last week Mr Tom White of Caledon, who has taken and read this paper since it was established, dropped in and renewed for the 31st time. Mr. White showed us a penknife which the late Mr Foley, founder of THE SUN, presented to him 25 years ago Mr. W. has used the knife ever since.

HE'LL SOON BE WITH YOU.—An exchange gives the following advice without any extra charge: Do not pledge a vote too long in advance of polling day It is not well to deprive yourself of an absolute freedom of choice. Give no vote to the most active canvasser. Your vote should not be the reward of the candidate who can walk farthest or beg hardest for it but is the only weapon with which the citizen can protect his own pocket from ex cessive taxation.

A CHRISTMAS CHEER.—The High School Girls' Beneficient Society will give a free supper and concert to the poor of Orangeville in the town hall on Friday evening, the 11th inst., providing they can secure the use of the building free of charge. The young ladies should have the hearty support of every charitable citizen of the town for the effort they are making to cheer some saddened hearts. A good program is being arranged and a first class tea will be provided. No admission fee or collection will be charged, and it will be a genuine Christmas cheer

WON THE PRIZES.—The market continues to boom and a great deal of produce is handled every week Those who captured the prizes on Thursday were: For pair of turkeys, Mrs. E J Ellis, Caledon, fancy lamp, value $1 50 by T MacAdam; 15 lb roll of butter, Miss Jas. Cook, East Garafraxa, $1. cash by Stewart, Hewat & Co; pail of butter, 15 to 20 lbs, Mrs H. Torrance, Caledon, $1 cash by Beswick & Atkin; pair of chickens, Mrs. Wm Laverty, Mono, $1 cash by R. Beatty.

A GREAT SUCCESS.—The concert given in the town hall on Friday evening in aid of the Citizens' band was one of the most successful events of the season, and Bandmaster Ketchum and the boys are to be congratulated for the great treat which they provided. The band played several selections on the street the evening of the entertainment and before 8 o'clock the hall was filled to the doors. Shortly after the hour for commencing Mayor Walsh delivered a brief address, after which the band opened the program by playing a delightful march. Mrs. Caldwell of Toronto and Mr. Geo. Fox were the stars of the evening. Mrs. Caldwell is without doubt one of the best singers in the Dominion and she was brought back once and twice after every song. Mr. George Fox, the young violinist, is a finished artist, and his playing was something phenomenonal. Mr. Jesse Ketchum played a difficult cornet solo and was loudly applauded, as was Mr. W. F. Seymour in his clarionet solo. Mrs. Ketchum, Mrs. Seymour, Misses Haley and Turnbull sang a quartette, "Greeting to Spring," and were encored to the echo. The band discoursed several pieces during the evening, which were well received. The committee went to great expense in bringing such distinguished talent to town and are to be complimented on the success of the entertainment. The receipts amounted to $115.

BAZAAR.—A class in St. Mark's Sabbath school, taught by Mrs. Walsh, are arranging to hold a bazaar which will take place in the basement of the church on Friday evening, the 18th.

SHIELDMAN GETS OUT.—Wm. Shieldman, the boy who has been committed to stand his trial at the spring assizes for the murder of J. A. Montgomery, was released on bail on Friday afternoon last. Mayor Walsh, Shieldman's counsel, laid the matter before Attorney General Mowat, who ordered that the young fellow be released on bail, himself for $2000 and two sureties for $1000 each or four for $500. Messrs J. Clark, and J. A. Patterson, Orangeville, J. Wilson and Alex. Bagnell, Mono, are the other bondsmen.

HE IS PLEASED.—The latest excitement in Orangeville is the manifesto issued by the school board. It appears Inspector Gordon did not give a favorable report of the school in his last report and the trustees are much annoyed thereat. We are pleased to know that we have a county official who discharges his duties faithfully and fearlessly.—Shelburne Free Press Does our contemporary labor under the delusion that the other county officials do not discharge their duties faithfully and fearlessly? If it does an investigation should take place right away.

LOCK YOUR DOORS.—Hardly a night goes by without Nightwatchman Parkin finding one or two store doors unlocked Sometimes the merchant locks his door and leaves the key in the keyhole, and frequently the rear cellar doors are left wide open. When the patrolman discovers any cases of this kind he goes and informs the shopkeeper, who may reside a mile from his place of business. It would be better if merchants would see that their clerks securely fasten all doors and thus save Patrolman Parkin the trouble of leaving his beat, which is already extensive enough for one man.

A TALENTED LADY.—Mrs. R. T. Haun, Orangeville's well known literary lady, has been engaged for some months past in writing stories and essays to be read in public by herself. She has also been studying elocution under Prof. Clark, principal of the Toronto School of Elocution, and intends entering on a course of dramatic readings (original) in the early spring. Mrs. Haun will give her first professional reading in the town hall on Friday evening, the 11th, at the High School Girls' Beneficient Society's concert from a story that she has just completed, entitled "Written upon Tombstones." We might add that her writings have been criticised by several of the ablest critics in Toronto and they pronounced them excellent.

EVERYBODY READS IT.—THE SUN is the favorite local paper of this section of the country, and we will do everything in our power to make it even more popular in the future. Honesty and reliability win in the long run. Sensationalism is all very well for a time, but sooner or later it plays out. Merchants are beginning to realize the fact that it pays to advertise in a reliable journal, and, consequently THE SUN'S advertising columns are kept pretty well filled. A little incident occurred in town last week which justifies us in saying that THE SUN "gets there" every time. The Citizens' band gave an entertainment a few evenings ago, and this journal was the only paper in town to boom the enterprise, neither of our contemporaries saying a single word about it. Nevertheless the hall was completely filled with people of the town and surrounding country. Always remember, "If you see it in THE SUN it's so."

WOULD THIS DO IT?—The Parry Sound Star has hit on a novel way to make delinquent subscribers pay up, and we are seriously thinking of adopting the scheme. Some of our subscribers owe us for one, two and five years' subscription, and although we have repeatedly sent them their bills a number of them (the subscribers) do not pay the least attention to our request. Here is the Star's plan of campaign and if there is not a quick response we will follow in our contemporary's footsteps: The courts have recently decided that it is legal for a person to whom debts are due, to advertise and sell them by public auction to the highest bidder. We have on our books the names of a large number of persons who should be ashamed to allow their accounts to stand unpaid so long Unless all these old outstanding accounts are paid before January 1st, next, we will certainly offer them for sale, and thus give the public an idea of how some people use the printer. This is no idle threat, we mean it.

FOR THE POOR.—The members of the High School Girls' Beneficent Society have secured the use of the town hall for the evening of Friday the 11th. They are working hard making arrangements for a free concert and supper which will be given to the poor of the town Little or no expense is connected with the undertaking, and the girls are meeting with splendid success in soliciting money, clothing, provisions etc. In The SUN of last week the program of the society was stated, and our request on behalf of those charitably disposed young ladies has been responded to by the public in a hearty manner. A substantial tea will be served in the market room from 5:30 till 7:30, and the concert will commence at 8 o'clock, sharp The program is first class and the best local talent will participate As no admission will be charged every body is invited to the concert, but the supper is solely for the needy The program committee are: Em. Foley, Hester Gray, Maggie Sibly, Nellie McCue, Ethel Thompson and Bessie Love. The following is the program:

"SPERO" SPEARED.

A Woodbridge Gentleman Fires a Few Questions at Him.

To the Editor of THE SUN:

SIR,—One who calls himself "Spero" says in THE SUN of November 19, that there are those who teach that there are "infants in hell a span long," and that "every minute thirty human beings drop into the unspeakable and unending torments of hell."

I would "spier" (Scotch for ask) "Spero," who teach these doctrines? I would very well like to know. Give me their names; answer fairly and squarely without any dodging. Many a time I have heard about these "span long" infants, but have never been able to learn where the doctrine about them spoken of is taught. I have heard too about these "thirty-a minute people," but I am as much in the dark about them.

"Spero" will find that I have "speared" him as effectually as any one ever speared a salmon.

Woodbridge. T. FENWICK.

CAMILLA.

BREVITIES.—Mr. John Howard of Hastings is visiting at home.....John Temple of Whittington has exchanged farms with James McDonald, and will soon remove to lot 20, con. 3, west Mono.

ABOUT ANNIVERSARIES.—Meetings are to be held in both Presbyterian and English churches to consider the advisability of holding their annual entertainments. Further notice will be given shortly.

LOOK OUT FOR THEM.—We can confidentially promise THE SUN'S readers a great treat next week. An account of the great inquisition, and Joy, Honesty and Liberty Lewis' great dream will be two of the subjects, and remember they will be overflowing with interest. We are sorry we cannot get J. H. L's dream in this week, but look out for next week and we will not disappoint you.

LEAVING.—Both teachers of our public school leave at the close of the present term. While the gentlemen have been here they have won the esteem and admiration of the people, both as teachers and individuals. Some senseless persons have made every endeavor to drag them into disrepute by accusing them of writing scurrilous matter to a town newspaper. We understand they are both going back to school and we wish them success.

THAT INVESTIGATION.—The momentous event that has been looked forward to for some time with great suspense, and which endangered life, is past, but I gase on it now with throbbing heart and quivering brow, in fact, your correspondent is not equal for the occasion, and he will have to leave the greater part over until next week. The verdict of the lodge was that, "Bro. Morrison be expelled from the Sons of Ireland till such a time as he shall furnish conclusive proof that he is not the writer of the article in the Post that referred to Bro. Hewitt."

accidental witness to a clandestine meeting between Miss Langley and a stranger, she would take the matter into her hands and manage it better than we should. At all events, a word of counsel from her would go further with Florian than anything you or I could say."

"That isn't a bad idea," said Chadwick. "I'll do it. I'll speak to her to-morrow. But she mustn't tell that domestic elephant of hers anything about it though. He'd trumpet the story all over the town."

"Swear her to secrecy, Chadwick," said Damerel; "I suppose you can manage her. A clever fellow like you can certainly wheedle an aunt."

"Good night, old fellow," said Chadwick. "I see you are better. The vital spark is not quite put out; there is a rise in the funds—of spirit. As to other funds they are hopelessly low—at least in my case. Adieu! I try to-morrow to look a little less like a gloomy bandit-discovered in a cave, drinking."

With this parting allusion of chaff, Mr. Chadwick wished his friend an affectionate good-night, and retired to his slumbers.

THE MIRACLE CITY.

A NEW NAME SUGGESTED FOR HAMILTON.

Another Remarkable Case which would indicate that the Name Would be Quite Appropriate.

The number of remarkable cures occurring in Hamilton is causing general comment throughout the country. To those who know the inside facts there is not the least cause for wonderment. The remarkable cure of Mr. John Marshall who was known to almost every citizen in Hamilton gave the Pink Pills an enormous sale in the city, one retail druggist alone selling 2,880 boxes in the past six months. People whose cases had been considered hopeless as was Mr. Marshall's, took hope from his case, persisted in the use of the pills, with equally wonderful results in their case. And what is happening in Hamilton in the way of remarkable cures, is happening in all parts of the Dominion, and every day adds to the pile of grateful testimonials which the proprietors of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are receiving. Last week the Hamilton Times investigated two more cases, the result of which is told in the following article in the issue of Nov. 7th:—

"The account of Mr. John Marshall's wonderful cure, after suffering for years with locomotor ataxy naturally brought to light several other cases of almost equally miraculous cures in this city. Among the many citizens who profited by Mr. Marshall's experience and who have been troubled for many years with the same affliction was Mr. William Webster. For a long time he was in the flour and feed business in the Market Square, and for over ten years while in his office he was compelled to remain in a reclining position on a couch, covered with heavy buffalo robes winter and summer. It was with difficulty that he could make his way, even with the aid of crutches, to his residence, but a short distance from the store. He attributes his trouble to constant exposure at the open door of his store, carrying heavy bags of grain in and out, and when overheated and perspiring sitting over an open cellar way in order to cool off. About a year and a half ago he found it necessary to give up his business, owing to the fact that he was becoming utterly helpless from his terrible disease. In June last, on hearing of Mr. Marshall's case, he began to take that well-known remedy, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and has been greatly benefitted thereby.

Mr. Webster was seen by a Times reporter at his residence, Macnab street north, Saturday afternoon, and was not at all loath to speak about his case. "With the exception of this trouble with my legs," he said, "I have never been sick a day since I was 17 years old, and now I am 55. This locomotor ataxy is a terrible disease. For years my legs have seemed as though they belonged to some one else. As I have lain asleep on a winter night, one leg has fallen out of the bed and when I would awaken with the cold I would have to feel around with my hand before I could tell which leg was out of the bed. If I were to try to place my foot on a spot on the carpet within easy reach I could no more do it than fly. The pain at times has been terrible. I have lain awake night after night, week after week, alternately grasping each foot in my agony as the sharp pains like knife-stabs shot through various parts of my anatomy. When I was first attacked with pains in my feet some 13 years ago I tried several physicians but could get no relief. Paralysis then set in and I immediately consulted a well-known specialist in Buffalo, who told me that I was suffering from locomotor ataxy and could not get better. I came home again and on the advice of friends tried several hot springs, but with no effect, except, perhaps, to aggravate my complaint. I finally became discouraged and after two years' doctoring, I underwent an operation. I was placed under chloroform a gash two inches and a half in depth made in the side of each leg near the hip and the doctors put their fingers in the gash and stretched the sciatic nerves in the vain hope that such would give me relief. Since then now over ten years ago, until June last, I took no medicine whatever, and retiring from business, became so helpless that I could not walk a step without my crutches, and sometimes the pain was something awful. About June, however, I got some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and after using the first box felt such a beneficial effect from them that I continued to use them ever since with the result that the terrible pains I used to suffer from have vanished, and with the exception of a gentle little dart at rare intervals, I might never know I had ever suffered with them. Since using the pills I get to sleep early and sleep as soundly and peacefully as a baby all night through. I can also walk a dozen steps or so without my crutches." And to illustrate, the old gentleman got up and walked across the room and back again to his seat alongside the reporter. "Now I couldn't do that at all before last June," continued he, "and the pills are certainly the pleasantest medicine to take that I ever tried. I would advise any one who is troubled with an affliction any way similar to mine, or who is suffering from any nervous disease, to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

THEY SELL RAPIDLY.

Mr J. A. Barr, the well-known Hamilton druggist, says that the demand for Pink Pills is something astonishing. Last winter he purchased one dozen boxes. This was his first order. Since then he has sold 3,880 boxes of the pills, and every day the demand is increasing. He sells at least two dozen per day. The same story comes from other druggists in Hamilton.

The other day Mrs. Martin, of Ferguson Avenue, Hamilton, Ont., called at Mr. John A. Barr's drug establishment and asked for a box of Pink Pills. She had a little girl with her in a perambulator, and while the mother was in the store the child climbed out over the side of the carriage. The mother laughed over the incident and remarked: "If it were not for Pink Pills my baby would never have been able to do that. To those in the drug store Mrs. Martin narrated the wonderful cure which had been effected by Pink Pills in the cure of her infant. When about a year old the baby became paralysed, and the anxious parents consulted the best doctors in the city, but their treatment was of no avail. The little one was not able to move hand or foot, and for a time the case was considered a hopeless one. Seeing an advertisement in the Hamilton Times of the wonderful cures being effected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, Mrs. Martin procured a box and before the youngster had taken all it contained, a marked improvement in her condition was noticed. The paralysis disappeared and the little one's health rapidly returned. The parents were thankful for the result of the pills, and it was while boasting of the wonderful cure that the child contracted cold that settled on its lungs and developed into a case of inflammation of the sidewalk. The mother told Mr. Barr that the paralysis had resulted from teething. A representative of the Times who investigated the case discovered that the little girl is now walking around in the best of health. The proprietors of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills state that they are not a patent medicine but a scientific preparation, prepared carefully for many years in the private practice of a physician of high standing. They are giving to the public as an unfailing blood builder and nerve restorer, curing all forms of weakness arising from a watery condition of the blood or shattered nerves, two fruitful causes of almost every ill that flesh is heir to. These pills are also a specific for the troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, all forms of weakness, chronic constipation, bearing down pains, etc., and in the case of men will give speedy relief and effect a permanent cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature. The pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, (50 cents a box—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. Brockville, Ont., or Morrisville, N. Y.

A Fact

WORTH knowing is that blood disease which defies all other remedies fail to cure, yields to Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatism, being able to walk only with great difficulty, and having tried various remedies, including Blood Purifiers, without benefit, I took up an advertisement in a Chicago paper, which contained testimony of the efficacy of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months. I was pleased to say that it effected a complete cure, and that I have since had no return of the disease."

Mrs. L. A. Scott, Hudson, N. Y., writes: "One year ago I was taken ill with rheumatism, being confined to my home six months. I became out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."

"I have taken a great deal of medicine, but nothing has done me as much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I feel hale and hearty before I half finished one bottle, and I can truly testify that it is the best blood medicine I know of."—L. W. Ward, Sr., Woodland, Tenn.

The Restof Rock Salt, for Stock.

Read what Prof. Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says regarding proper ways of salting stock: "Every dairy cattle should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has proved me that when given the choice of rock salt for a period of over one week they will yield from 5½ to 6½ per cent. more milk, and that of no inferior quality. Such milk will on an average, turn more in twenty days than that of cows not having had access to rock salt every day, all other conditions of treatment being equal."

THE only chemically pure Salt ever discovered, analyzed 99 84-100 Pure Salt. All kinds of stock will do better where this Salt is used; one ton will go four times as far as common salt, hence it is cheaper. It is the purest Salt in the world for the preservation of all kinds of meat, all the large packers are using it. It is sold cheaper than any other lump salt. We guarantee this Salt as advertised. Make a trial and you will always use it; we have in stock fine and coarse, at

Scores of lives are saved every year by its timely use.

Amanda R. Jenner, Northampton, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefits I have derived for my children from the use of Ayer's most excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and had the greatest fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I find that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the first symptoms of throat or lung trouble, they are relieved from danger, and are becoming robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1885 I took a bad cold which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. As a last resort I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been without this medicine. I am fifty years of age, weigh over 180 pounds, and attribute my good health to the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G. W. Youker, Salem, N. J.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which by repeated exposures, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thos. B. Russell, Secretary Holston Conference and P. E. of the Greenville District, M. E. ### THE COUNTRY LIFE.

Not what we would, but what we must,
Makes up the sum of living;
Heaven is both more and less than just
In taking and in giving;
Swords cleave to hands that sought the plough,
And barrels miss the soldiers brow.

Me, whom the city holds, whose feet
Have worn its stony highways,
Familiar with its loneliest street—
Its ways were never my ways—
My cradle was beside the sea,
And there, I hope, my grave will be.

Old homestead! In that old grey town,
Thy vane is seaward blowing.
Thy slip of garden stretches down
To where the tide is flowing;
Below they lie, their sails are furled,
The ships that go about the world.

Dearer that little country house,
Inland, with pines beside it;
Some beech trees, with unfruitful boughs,
A well, with weeds to hide it;
No flowers, or only such as rise
Self-sown, poor things, which all despise.

Dear country home! Can I forget
The least of thy sweet trifles?
The window vines that clamber yet,
Whose blooms the bee still rifles?
The roadside blackberries, growing ripe?
And in the woods the Indian pipe?

Happy the man who tills his field,
Content with rustic labour;
Earth does to him her fullest yield,
Hap what may to his neighbor.
Will days, sounds nights, O can there be
A life more rational and free?

Dear country life of child and man!
For both the best, the strongest,
That with the earliest race began,
And best outlived the longest,
Their cities perished long ago;
Who the first farmers were we know.

Perhaps our Babels, too, will fall,
If so, no lamentations:
For Mother Earth will shelter all,
And feed the unborn nations;
Yes, and the swords that menace now
Will then be beaten to the plough.

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE disappearance of John Trewavas began in his own county, to excite great bewilderment and excitement. It was in vain now that Lady Trewavas endeavored to keep secret the fact of her terrible anxiety. Friends pressed around again, who had stood aloft in her great trouble, and advisers came in crowds.

Sir Hilton had deemed it wiser not to mention in his letters that fleeting apparition of John which had mocked him in Paris; hence in Cornwall it was only known that he had been traced to the London Bridge station, and there was lost. Then every species of conjecture was rife concerning him. He was murdered—kidnapped; he had committed suicide: he was gone to Australia; he had formed some low marriage, and was hiding from his friends.

Meanwhile advertisements, offering rewards for John's recovery, dead or living, continued to add their mystery to the morning papers. These were read eagerly and commented on, but they led to no result. At length, after that glimpse of John at Paris, Sir Hilton discontinued the advertisements in England, and inserted them in the Continental journals instead. What bewildering discoveries, useless journeys, and endless correspondence this brought on him, it is unnecessary to relate. Enough, that the impecunious gentleman fished out of canals, the lonely gentleman wandering unknown in foreign towns, and the adventurous gentleman lost on mountains, were none of them John Trewavas. How often Sir Hilton started from Paris in hope, and returned in despair, it is needless to say. It is only necessary to observe, that this constant stream of false intelligence detained him in Paris when he would willingly have comforted the solitude of his aged grandparent at Trewavas. And she, on her side, deluded by false hopes, implored him to remain on the Continent, and forebore to speak to him of the gloomy horrors of her loneliness.

As day after day she sat alone, enduring her suspense, heavy thoughts bore her spirits down into the very depths of sorrow, and the hopelessness of old age crept chill about her. In the long, long evenings, when the wind moaned among the funeral trees, or wandered through the old house like sighing voices, the shadows rose up before her of her dead husband, her dead children—shadows of faces long departed to the world of spirits; above all the face of a baby brother and sister, dead and forgotten so many years ago, that she could search find their names written on the tablet of her memory. New these infant faces came constantly, came shadowy, hand in hand, and they ever strove to lift some curtain held before her heart, ever strove to show her some dread thought, hidden down, down in the depths of her soul. But she would not let them. With painful eagerness she drove the shadowy hands away, that would have torn away the veil, and, shuddering, she would glance upon the portraits on the walls, and remember now each one had died in honor and kindly love.

At such times, had an eye been there to see it, Lady Trewavas's aged face would look ghastly in the firelight, and her withered lips would murmur the dire word "Murder!" Then, starting, she would wrap her lace shawl around her bent form, and rising herself defiantly, would smile with a proud lip, and say to herself disdainfully, "An old woman's fancies!—fancies grow childish—childish!"

How often, as she muttered this disdain of her own weakness, would the wind come sighing through the dreary length of the west room, and whisper in her ear 'Olive,—Olive!—an outcast—a prisoner—a wanderer! And why? Spirits, tell her why."

Then they come around her in troops spirits of the dead and of the living—Eleanor, with wet clinging garments, rising from the dreadful pool; Olive, with angry brow; the little dead children, sad and reproachful, all striving with shadowy hands to lift the veil from off her heart; but she, with shrieking fingers, held it down, and shrieked alone for servants and for lights.

Then, with an awful presence creeping over nearer, nearer, she lived on through the spring days, grasping her letters with eager, trembling hands, at noon, and carrying through the day and night their chill disappointment in her shrinking heart. At times she listened to the servants' tales of ghostly footsteps in the changed house, and smiled at their folly.

"Ghosts!" she said, "Ah, the old have many ghosts around them."

But one night, when she sat up late alone, writing to her grandson Hilton, there came a step upon the gravel, and a finger tapped upon the glass.

The woman was brave, in spite of overwrought nerves and loneliness; she was brave as the daughter of an ancient race should be. But now the pen dropped from her fingers, and with face deadly pale, she raised her clasped hands to heaven, and murmured, "Oh God, have mercy on me! Is it come?—the thing I dreaded!"

Then she rose, walked to the window drew the Venetian blind aside; and looked out upon the night. All was calm and still as God's peace in a pure heart. Nothing here but the shadows of the great trees lying grey on the silvered grass, and the familiar shape of shrub and flower glistening pale in the moon's ray. Yet, as though unassured by the calmness and solitude, and deep silence around her, Lady Trewavas raised the sash, and stepped from the window to the lawn. And here, with the moonlight around her, dropping silver from every leaf, and shedding its cold, clear refulgence upon her pale face, and her snow-white hair, she stood for a moment silent and motionless.

No sound, no step disturbed her. A slight rustle of wind among the tree-tops, a low murmur on the beach as waves rippled on the sands, a distant bleat of plaintive lamb.—this was all that broke the silence of the night. Then, reassured, she turned her eyes away from the dark wood, where the deed was done, and fixed them on the sea. Its calm, its beauty, as it lay rippling and sparkling in the wonderous light of moon and stars, sank into her spirit, and with a sigh of thankfulness she bent her head a moment on her hands in prayer, and then re-entered the house.

"A fancy," she said, as she closed the window. "Ah! I am beset with childish fancies now."

But if it were a fancy, it was one that came again and again; and like a woman in a vision, seeing and hearing what was to be, Lady Trewavas listened for the ever-recurring footsteps, and the tap of the ghostly finger on the glass. Again and again she set the window open, and stood bravely on the lawn; and once she spoke aloud.

"I am here. Do you want me?"

The voice was low, unnatural, ghastly, and the words rang through the night air with a thrill of horror in them, that chilled her own blood, as they fell back upon her ear.

A momentary rustle is among the shrubs, as though a bird had flown away, and then there was blank silence; and in this silence she stepped within the window, closed it, and fell upon the floor.

"I have not strength for this ever recurring terror," she said, within herself. "To-morrow I will leave this room, and sit in the library."

So the next day a fire was lighted in that dim and distant room, and she sat there, with all her ghostly fancies about her. It was a cold March day, and the wind blew, and the rain fell, beating fiercely on the window pane with dreary persistence, and when night came it came in storm and tempest, with black darkness all around, while over the gloomy sea there swept fierce gusts, the roar of which mingled with the sound of the huge rollers that, in massive walls of water, rushed upon the beach, breaking into thunder as they fell.

As the sun went down into the heaving waters, cresting the waves with fire, a sudden crash shook the house from roof to basement, and a cry arose that a giant tree has fallen. Peering through the gathering darkness, Lady Trewavas saw dimly the noble trunk lying on the lawn, with limbs broken, roots upturn, and shrubs and flowers in ruin all around. The tree was reputed old as the house itself; a memorial elm, on the gnarled bark of which were carved the names of many a generation; an ancient tree, time honored, beneath the majestic shadow of which Trewavases, long since laid at rest, had played as little children.

As the aged woman who had upheld the name her husband gave her so long in love and honor, looked upon the fallen ruin of the old memorial elm, her heart sank with a ghastly foreboding of evil. It seemed an omen of a greater fall, a deeper ruin, a dismal death.

When, late in the stormy night, the servants went to rest, she still sat by the fire in that distant room, with the sadness of the fallen tree adding to her sorrows, and its regrets, its memories—its old, old love and tenderness, clinging to her spirit with all the grief we feel for the dead. It was gone—its place would know it no more. She would never sit under its shadow again, never more read the names carved on its bark by the dear hand that now beckoned to her from another world.

Lost in gloomy thought, she forgot the footstep on the gravel, the finger on the pane, till suddenly the sound was here, startling her from her tears, and bringing her to her feet in that unnatural tension of nerve which terror creates. She listened, breathless; and, amid the clatter of the fiercely beating rain, amid the fury of the storm, the ghostly sound struck the glass again in horrible distinctness.

What was it? And why had it followed her hither to this side of the house, where so seldom footsteps strayed? Moreover, what was there in the sound to-night which made it differ, with some ghastly, dreadful difference, from the same haunting sound on other nights? Was the difference this—that now it was reality? As she asked this question she stood rooted to the floor, with parted lips and strained ear, catching her breath as she listened for the sound again.

And it came. Not all the fury of the storm could cower it now; it was here, at her window—a ghastly hand, crving admittance. Should she do as she had done on other nights, not the sash wide open, and stand upon the lawn? How could she, on such a night, when the winds howled in fury, and the flood poured down like a torrent? But she must—she must? That veil upon her heart is growing thinner and thinner, and to-night the last shred must be flung away.

Who shall dare to paint her fear, as, step by step, she drew near the window? There was no Venetian blind here; it was closed by shutters, and as her aged hands tremblingly withdrew the bolt, her heart tightened and shrank, and the thought of what she might see, clutched her breath like visible fingers on the throat. A moment's agony of indecision, then the shutter flings open, and there is a face against the glass close to hers!—a haggard face, worn, storm-beaten, drenched with pitiless rain! And as the rain beats upon it, and the woman falls upon her knees, she sees the white lips move, and she hears a prayer that drops upon her heart with a wrench of agony, like a sudden touch of fire.

She cannot but listen to that fearful cry for pity—to that broken voice of anguish, craving only for a shelter in which to die. She rises; she sets the window open; but as that wild figure, wind battered, haggard, forlorn, with madness in its fevered eyes, steps within, she draws back, and holds up her withered hand betwixt it and her.

"Stand back!" she cries. "Do not touch me. I know you—murderer!"

CHAPTER XXIV.

"Now, don't tell me any secrets, Dick," exclaimed Mrs. Gunning. "I am worn to a thread paper already with secrets. I walk about like a mine all day, ready to explode; and at night, when I see my dear, good, innocent Tobias sleeping like a dove, I—"

But here Mrs Gunning's feelings quite overcame her, and she wiped her eyes hurriedly.

"But my dear aunt," expostulated the amiable Dick, "surely one secret more won't break your back; and you have just confessed that my uncle Tobias himself is going about like a modern Guy Fawkes, with some terrible plot in the dark lantern of his mind.

"I acknowledge it," said Mrs. Gunning. But for that unkindness of his, I should feel like a domestic servant. As it is, I fancy we are quits."

A twinkle in the good lady's eye showed, in spite of her contrition she was not ill pleased at the idea of possessing as good a secret as her husband.

"Quits!" exclaimed Chadwick. "Not a bit of it, aunt. I'll bet you a month's pay that uncle's Tobias's secret is three times bigger and wickeder than yours."

"Isn't Herbert Langley here every day, whispering and conspiring? And wasn't uncle out last night, and the night before, till two in the morning?"

"Good gracious, yes! How did you know it?" exclaimed Mrs. Gunning.

"My dear aunt, you told me so yourself," replied her nephew; "and I am sorry for you, I am indeed. I am afraid Langley is taking advantage of my uncle's unsophisticated innocence to—to—in fact, to play the goose, and the least you can do in return, is to have two plots to his one. That will balance things a little more fairly—don't you see?"

"Two plots are more than I can manage, Dick; and there's an end," said Mrs. Gunning. "So none of your wicked insinuations about your dear, good uncle. I know him; it is some good deed he is keeping secret from me—poor angel."

"I wish I could get somebody to believe that I was an angel," sighed Chadwick. "I'd marry her directly, especially if she'd look upon my staying out till two in the morning as a good deed."

"Dick, your friend Damerel is looking ill," said Mrs. Gunning, changing the subject abruptly.

"He'll have a tombstone growing out of his head soon," said Chadwick, "if things don't alter. I'm worn to a bone looking after him. I call cruel in you, aunt, not to help me. Another secret won't hurt you."

"So the secret is about Damerel, then?" said Mrs. Gunning.

"No, it isn't he replied. "It's about Miss Langley; but that's the same thing."

"The same thing?" said Mrs. Gunning. "I don't see that, Dick. What has your friend to do with Florian?"

"He's spooney on her," he replied, "and he's as jealous and miserable as a mad dog."

"Is that your secret?" asked his aunt, "Why doesn't your friend do his wooing in a more cheerful manner?"

"He hasn't a chance with Miss Langley, aunt," he replied. "There is a rival in the field."

"Not Sir Hilton?" said Mrs. Gunning, her face blushing red.

"No, not Sir Hilton," said Chadwick. "Though, upon my word, the interest she takes in him is evident enough. Is she a flirt?"

"No," was the quick reply. "If it is not Sir Hilton, who is it, Dick?"

"That's the secret," said he.

Chadwick here plunged into the story of the "accidental" capial of Florian, and her unknown lover; to which Mrs. Gunning listened at first with incredulity, and at last with dismay.

"I don't understand it in the least," she observed. "I should have imagined that Florian was the last girl in the world to do such a thing as this. She has too delicate, too refined a nature, to feel a pleasure, as some do, in a secrecy. A mystery would have no charms for her; her mind is too open and truthful."

"Nevertheless," said Dick, as he coaxed on his lemon kids, "the facts are as I have had the honor of stating them. Love is a great leveller, aunt; and even the high-minded fall at last beneath his spell. In fact, dropping all humbug, girls, when once in love, will do anything for a man; and that fellow is a great scamp who ever asks them to do aught that might compromise their name or position. Get Miss Langley out of Paris if you can, aunt, and leave her brother to kick this rascal into the Seine. This affair, you know mustn't go on. It's serious; and it will end in a general row, and be the ruin of the girl, if her friends don't bestir themselves. There now, I have done my duty," concluded Dick in paternal manner, "and so I'll wish you good morning. You'll take the matter up in a satisfactory manner, I am sure, aunt. I [illegible] completely into your [illegible] hands. Speak to the mother, or the brother, or the young lady herself, as you think best. I leave it entirely to you."

"You are mighty magnanimous, Dick," said Mrs. Gunning, tartly. "You put all the burden on my back in a most generous way."

"Because I know you'll manage it splendidly, aunt," replied Dick. "And now I'll go home and munle Demorel with a cigar; he's getting dangerous."

Mrs. Gunning lost no time in fulfilling her disagreeable mission. She rolled herself into a shawl, called a facre, and departed for Mrs. Langley's. But in the drawing-room, to her great vexation, she found Sir Hilton Trewavas and her own dear Tobias. The latter was in deep confabulation with Herbert Langley, while the former, who had only just returned from one of his fruitless journeys in quest of his brother, was conversing with Florian and her mother.

During this conversation Mrs. Gunning's sharp eye perceived that Florian was painfully uneasy. She grew red and white by turns, and was evidently desirous that the talk concerning John Trewavas should cease. Upon this, a strange suspicion darted into that acute lady's mind, "What if it was John Trewavas himself, that Florian was meeting clandestinely?"

The thought turned her cold. Better see her die than form an attachment to him.

"Florian," she whispered eagerly, I want to speak to you. Can't you come away?"

Florian looked surprised, but nodded to her affirmatively, and was moving quietly to the door, when a word from her brother arrested her steps, and she stood like one transfixed, pale as death.

"You ought to find your brother, Sir Hilton," said Herbert, "for all the police in Paris are helping you. Gunning and I found that out the other day, when we went to the Bureau de Police about an affair of my own."

"I have never asked their aid," returned Sir Hilton, a little stiffly. "I do not understand their interference."

With parted lips Florian listened, and Mrs. Gunning saw her grasp a chair for support. The kind woman herself grew pale from terror and sympathy.

"Well, at all events, they are more likely to succeed than you," continued Herbert; "and depend upon it, they would not interfere without good cause; they doubtless suspect something."

Florian drew her breath painfully, and, turning her eyes on Sir Hilton's face, fixed them there in great suspense, awaiting his answer.

"I shall go myself, and make enquiries," he said, rising. "Heaven knows I am willing enough to accept any and every aid in this painful mystery; and it is only regard for John's peculiar nervous sensitiveness that——"

Sir Hilton had got as far as this in his speech, when Florian's hand touched his arm.

"Do not go to the police, Sir Hilton," she said; "they will not tell you anything."

Every one looked at her with surprise, except Mrs. Gunning. That lady now felt sure that the man Florian had met clandestinely, was the unhappy John Trewavas.

"Why, Flo, you are talking nonsense," exclaimed her brother. "How can you possibly know that the police will withhold any information from Sir Hilton?"

But Florian did not heed him; her small hand still grasped Sir Hilton's arm, and, bending down her head, she whispered in his ear:

"Wait till to-morrow; wait, I entreat you, for your brother's sake. If by to-morrow evening you have heard nothing, come to me, and I will give you news."

While she whispered this, Mr. Gunning was making one of his nasal remarks in his loudest manner, and as it was a favorite idea of Herbert's that his sister was "spooney" on Sir Hilton, he was gallant enough to give all his attention to the Gunning nose. Hence Sir Hilton's sudden paleness and extreme wonder passed unnoticed by all but Mrs. Gunning.

"For mercy's sake, Miss Langley——" he began.

"Hush!" whispered Florian, in great distress; "to-morrow evening; I am not at liberty to speak now. Spare me, I entreat you, and promise you will wait."

Her agitation, her evident fear of being heard, influenced Sir Hilton, in spite of himself.

"I promise," he said, softly; "but I must pass twenty four hours of anguish."

His face was full of amazement, and bowing to Florian, he quitted the room hurriedly. But the young lady followed him, and once more the light touch of her trembling hand arrested his steps.

"Have patience," she said, gently; "it will only be till to-morrow. Others have had so much patience—have borne so much for you. And remember, I have your promise."

She waved her hand to him, and fled up the stairs quickly. She intended to go to her own room, but on the landing—the one above the drawing room door—stood Mrs. Gunning. She looked stern and pale, and coming forward hurriedly, she seized Florian's hand.

"What is this you are doing?" she cried. "You are mad, Florian, to mix yourself with this business."

"What business?" asked Florian, faintly, striving to release her hand.

"This business of John Trewavas's disappearance," replied Mrs Gunning. "You may deceive your blind mother, Florian Langley, but you cannot deceive me."

"Mrs Gunning!" exclaimed Florian, indignantly.

"Be angry if you like, my dear," said Mrs. Gunning; "it doesn't matter. I have known you since you were six years old, and I can bear your anger for your own sake, else my friendship is worth little."

"Then you confess friendship must bear something—friendship must be active, not passive?" cried Florian, eagerly.

"Friendship!" said Mrs. Gunning; "I wish I could think you were acting from friendship, Florian, Florian! It is love, not friendship, that has led you to interfere in the affairs of John Trewavas."

"Oh, Mrs. Gunning, of what are you causing me?" said Florian, covering her face with her hands, and bursting into tears. "This is unfair—cruel."

Florian, it is not cruel, but it is serious—frightfully serious," said the kindly Mrs. Gunning, placing her arm around her, and drawing her within the adjoining chamber. "Now sit down child, and listen to me. First, do you own that you can never marry this man—never, never?"

There was a deep sob, a passionate cry of pain in the answer, but no denial of Mrs. Gunning's words.

"You can never marry him," she continued; "you acknowledge it, even if Eleanor Maristowe had not been murdered, he would not have loved you."

"No, he would not have loved me," said Florian, forlornly. "I know it, why tell me so, Mrs. Gunning?"

"To save you, to save you," she replied. "If there was no other reason, deeper, more dreadful, his want of love for you alone should keep you from meeting this man."

Florian's hands fell from her face, and she gazed at Mrs. Gunning in dismay and terror.

"You know I meet him?" she said.

"I know it; and I warn you, Florian, your love can only end in pain, agony, perhaps death," replied Mrs. Gunning. "Save yourself while there is yet time, Florian. Promise me you will never see him again."

"I cannot promise you," said Florian. "I must see him again, even this evening."

"Florian Langley, you are mad!" exclaimed Mrs. Gunning, rising, and pacing the room angrily. "Must I break your mother's heart with this story? Will you force me to call upon your brother to save you?"

"No, no!" cried Florian. "Oh, Mrs. Gunning, I entreat you to listen to me! If you speak to my brother you will bring down such pain and misery upon my head that I shall die of it."

"Can it be worse pain than you will bring upon yourself, Florian, if you persist in this course? Do you know what you are doing?" said Mrs. Gunning, drawing nearer to the trembling girl, and standing before her.

"Yes, I know what I am doing," replied Florian, in a very low, gentle voice. "I know I am destroying my own happiness, but it is too late to let such a reason draw me back. Oh, Mrs. Gunning, when I first met him, could I tell that I was going to be so weak, so wicked, so foolish, as to love him?"

Sobbing, as though her heart would break, she let her head droop upon her hands, while her tears fell fast.

"Love him!" repeated Mrs. Gunning, with an indescribable accent of loathing. "Has he ever dared to speak one word of love to you?"

"No, never! I swear to you, never!" cried Florian. "Are not all his thoughts with another?"

The pain, the bitter, yet meek sorrow of her words rang through Mrs. Gunning's ears, filling her veins with anger. She turned and gazed upon the anguish of the girl, for a moment, in silence, then she bent over her, saying in a low, clear whisper, "Florian, I ask once more do you know what you are doing? Do you know who killed Eleanor Maristowe?"

The horror in her voice, the shrinking terror with which she glanced around, showed that Mrs. Gunning asked this question with extreme reluctance.

"I am afraid I guess," replied Florian, with face growing pale as her own. "And you heard what Sir Hilton said just now. Oh, Mrs. Gunning, have pity on me! Keep my miserable secret; don't kill me with pain and shame."

The deep carnation that spread over her face and neck seemed to burn her with its glow as she flung herself down on the cushion to hide it.

"I will keep your secret," said Mrs. Gunning, compassionately; "but these clandestine meetings must cease at once; they are a disgrace to you."

"No; I deny that!" exclaimed Florian, raising her head indignantly. "You mistake me and him. Have I not already told you that he has never spoken one word of love to me?—never will speak it?" she added, as she hid her face again.

"Then why has he sought you out? why has he met you again and again?" asked Mrs. Gunning, incredulously.

"To entreat me to help him to find Olive Varcoe—to talk always, always of her—to beseech me to search for her, and give her a refuge till he clears her name," replied Florian.

"Oh!" said Mrs. Gunning, grimly, "he wants to find poor little Olive does he? He wants to do her justice at last."

"It is all his thought, all he lives for, I think," said Florian, in her saddest voice. "And I have striven so hard, Mrs. Gunning, to find that poor girl. And all in vain. I want to give her a home here. I cannot bear to see his misery about her, his anguish, and sickness of heart. He knows her innocent, and he fears that her silent martyrdom will crush her into the grave. She has hidden herself from him—from everyone——"

"Who can wonder at that?" interrupted Mrs. Gunning, fiercely. "Have not the Trewavases driven that little creature out into the world, to suffer for their pride's sake, and to die for them if she will? Ah! the tale of that girl's sufferings would make a long romance, Florian Langley."

Dear country boat! Can I forget
The feast of thy sweet trifles?
The window vines that climber yet,
Whose blossoms the bee still rifles?
The roadside blackberries, growing ripe?
And in the woods the Indian pipe?

Content with rustic labour;
Earth does to him her fullest yield,
Reap what may to his neighbor.
Well days, sounds nights, O can there be

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE disappearance of John Trewavas began in his own county, to excite great bewilderment and excitement. It was in vain now that Lady Trewavas endeavored to keep secret the fact of her terrible anxiety. Friends pressed around again, who had stood aloft in her great trouble, and advisers came in crowds.

Sir Hilton had deemed it wiser not to mention in his letters that fleeting apparition of John which had mocked him in Paris; hence in Cornwall it was only known that he had been traced to the London Bridge station, and there was lost. Then every species of conjecture was rife concerning him. He was murdered—kidnapped: he had committed suicide: he was gone to Australia; he had formed some low marriage, and was hiding from his friends.

Meanwhile advertisements, offering rewards for John's recovery, dead or living, continued to add their mystery to the morning papers. These were read eagerly and commented on, but they led to no result. At length, after that glimpse of John at Paris, Sir Hilton discontinued the advertisements in England, and inserted them in the Continental journals instead. What bewildering discoveries, useless journeys, and endless correspondence this brought on him, it is unnecessary to relate. Enough, that the impecunious gentleman fished out of canals, the lonely gentleman wandering unknown in foreign towns, and the adventurous gentleman lost on mountains, were none of them John Trewavas. How often Sir Hilton started from Paris in hope, and returned in despair, it is needless to say. It is only necessary to observe, that this constant stream of false intelligence detained him in Paris when he would willingly have comforted the solitude of his aged grandparent at Trewavas. And she, on her side, deluded by false hopes, implored him to remain on the Continent, and forebore to speak to him of the gloomy horrors of her loneliness.

As day after day she sat alone, enduring her suspense, heavy thoughts bore her spirits down into the very depths of sorrow, and the hopelessness of old age crept chill about her. In the long, long evenings, when the wind moaned among the funeral trees, or wandered through the old house like sighing voices, the shadows rose up before her of her dead husband, her dead children—shadows of faces long departed to the world of spirits; above all the face of a baby brother and sister, dead and forgotten so many years ago, that she could scarcely find their names written on the tablet of her memory. New these infant faces came constantly, came shadowy, hand in hand, and they ever strove to lift some curtain held before her heart, ever strove to show her some dread thought, hidden down, down in the depths of her soul. But she would not let them. With painful eagerness she drove the shadowy hands away, that would have torn away the veil, and, shuddering, she would glance upon the portraits on the walls, and remember now each one had died in honor and kindly love.

At such times, had an eye been there to see it, Lady Trewavas's aged face would look ghastly in the firelight, and her withered lips would murmur the dire word "Murder!" Then, starting, she would wrap her lace shawl around her bent form, and rising herself defiantly, would smile with a proud lip, and say to herself disdainfully, "An old woman's fancies!—fancies grow childish—childish!"

How often, as she muttered this disdain of her own weakness, would the wind come sighing through the dreary length of the east room, and whisper in her ear 'Olive,—Olive!—an outcast—a prisoner—a wanderer! And why? Spirits, tell her why."

Then they came around her in troops spirits of the dead and of the living—Eleanor, with wet clinging garments, rising from the dreadful pool; Olive, with parted lips and strained ear, catching her breath as she listened for—the thing I dreaded!"

Then she rose, walked to the window drew the Venetian blind aside; and looked out upon the night. All was calm and still as God's peace is a pure heart. Nothing here but the shadows of the great trees lying grey on the silvered grass, and the familiar shape of shrub and flower glistening pale in the moon's ray. Yet, as though unassured by the calmness and solitude, and deep silence around her, Lady Trewavas raised the sash, and stepped from the window to the lawn. And here, with the moonlight around her, dropping silver from every leaf, and shedding its cold, clear refulgence upon her pale face, and her snow white hair, she stood for a moment silent and motionless.

No sound, no step disturbed her. A slight rustle of wind among the treetops, a low murmur on the beach as waves rippled on the sands, a distant bleat of plaintive lamb,—this was all that broke the silence of the night. Then, reassured, she turned her eyes away from the dark wood, where the deed was done, and fixed them on the sea. Its calm, its beauty, as it lay rippling and sparkling in the wonderous light of moon and stars, sank into her spirit, and with a sigh of thankfulness she bent her head a moment on her hands in prayer, and then re-entered the house.

"A fancy," she said, as she closed the window. "Ah! I am beset with childish fancies now!"

But if it were a fancy, it was one that came again and again; and like a woman in a vision, seeing and hearing what was to be, Lady Trewavas listened for the ever-recurring footsteps, and the tap of the ghostly finger on the glass. Again and again she set the window open, and stood bravely on the lawn; and once she spoke aloud.

"I am here. Do you want me?"

The voice was low, unnatural, ghastly, and the words rang through the night air with a thrill of horror in them, that chilled her own blood, as they fell back upon her ear.

A momentary rustle is among the shrubs, as though a bird had flown away, and then there was blank silence; and in this silence she stepped within the window, closed it, and fell upon the floor.

"I have not strength for this ever recurring terror," she said, within herself. "To-morrow I will leave this room, and sit in the library."

So the next day a fire was lighted in that dim and distant room, and she sat there, with all her ghostly fancies about her. It was a cold March day, and the wind blew, and the rain fell, beating fiercely on the window pane with dreary persistence, and when night came it came in storm and tempest, with black darkness all around, while over the gloomy sea there swept fierce gusts, the roar of which mingled with the sound of the huge rollers that, in massive walls of water, rushed upon the beach, breaking into thunder as they fell.

As the sun went down into the heaving waters, cresting the waves with fire, a sudden crash shook the house from roof to basement, and a cry arose that a giant tree has fallen. Peering through the gathering darkness, Lady Trewavas saw dimly the noble trunk lying on the lawn, with limbs broken, roots upturn, and shrubs and flowers in ruin all around. The tree was reputed old as the house itself; a memorial elm, on the gnarled bark of which were carved the names of many a generation; an ancient tree, time honored, beneath the majestic shadow of which Trewavases, long since laid at rest, had played as little children.

As the aged woman who had upheld the name her husband gave her so long in love and honor, looked upon the fallen ruin of the old memorial elm, her heart sank with a ghastly foreboding of evil. It seemed an omen of a greater fall, a deeper ruin, a dismal death.

When, late in the stormy night, the servants went to rest, she still sat by the fire in that distant room, with the sadness of the fallen tree adding to her sorrows, and its regrets, its memories—its old, old love and tenderness, clinging to her spirit with all the grief we feel for the dead. It was gone—its place would know it no more. She would never sit under its shadow again, never more read the names carved on its back by the dear hand that now beckoned to her from another world.

Lost in gloomy thought, she forgot the footstep on the gravel, the finger on the pane, till suddenly the sound was here, startling her from her tears, and bringing her to her feet in that unnatural tension of nerve which terror creates. She listened, breathless; and, amid the clatter of the fiercely beating rain, amid the fury of the storm, the ghostly sound struck the glass again in horrible distinctness.

What was it? And why had it followed her hither to this side of the house, where so seldom footsteps strayed? Moreover, what was there in the sound to-night which made it differ, with some ghastly, dreadful difference, from the same haunting sound on other nights? Was the difference skin—that now it was reality? As she asked this question she stood rooted to the floor, with parted lips and strained ear, catching her breath as she listened for the sound to come again.

Dear Lady Trewavas! Poor Olive! Poor Eleanor! Poor John! Poor all! Let us hide from them the dreadful ordeal they underwent that night. Let us say that Olive, in her room, knelt down and prayed God to have mercy on her, and to give her strength to bear what was before her. Let us say that she rose from her knees with a prayer that sleep upon her eyelids would be sent to her, that she might be refreshed for the morrow. Let us say that she lay down, and that God heard her prayer, and that she slept soon and long. Let us say that she dreamed of her lover, and that he came to her in her sleep, and that he kissed her lips, and that she felt his arms around her, and that she nestled to his breast with a sigh of happiness. Let us say that she dreamed that they were married, and that they went to a little church in the country to be married, and that the sunlight streamed through the windows, and that the birds sang outside, and that the bells rang a merry peal, and that they came out of the church and walked through the sunlit porch, and that the birds sang and the bells rang still, and that—she awoke to find that it was all a dream, and that the birds sang and the bells rang still, and that—there was some one at the door.

Who was it? Who was it who came to Olive Varcoe in her room that morning? Who was it who came to Olive Varcoe in her room every morning? Who was it who came to Olive Varcoe in her room every morning and sat by her side and talked to her? Who was it who came to Olive Varcoe in her room every morning and sat by her side and talked to her and held her hand? Who was it who came to Olive Varcoe in her room every morning and sat by her side and talked to her and held her hand and kissed her? Who was it who came to Olive Varcoe in her room every morning and sat by her side and talked to her and held her hand and kissed her and told her stories?

During this conversation Mrs. Gunning's sharp eye perceived that Florian was painfully uneasy. She grew red and white by turns, and was evidently desirous that the talk concerning John Trewavas should cease. Upon this, a strange suspicion darted into that acute lady's mind, "What if it was John Trewavas himself, that Florian was meeting clandestinely?"

The thought turned her cold. Better see her dead than form an attachment to him.

"Florian," she whispered eagerly, "I want to speak to you. Can't you come away?"

Florian looked surprised, but nodded to her affirmatively, and was moving quietly to the door, when a word from her brother arrested her steps, and she stood like one transfixed, pale as death.

"You ought to find your brother, Sir Hilton," said Herbert, "for all the police in Paris are helping you. Gunning and I found that out the other day, when we went to the Bureau de Police about an affair of my own."

"I have never asked their aid," returned Sir Hilton, a little stiffly. "I do not understand their interference."

With parted lips Florian listened, and Mrs. Gunning saw her grasp a chair for support. The kind woman herself grew pale from terror and sympathy.

"Well, at all events, they are more likely to succeed than you," continued Herbert; "and depend upon it, they would not interfere without good cause; they doubtless suspect something."

Florian drew her breath painfully, and, turning her eyes on Sir Hilton's face, fixed them there in great suspense, awaiting his answer.

"I shall go myself, and make enquiries," he said, rising. "Heaven knows I am willing enough to accept any and every aid in this painful mystery; and it is only regard for John's peculiar nervous sensitiveness that——"

Sir Hilton had got as far as this in his speech, when Florian's hand touched his arm.

"Do not go to the police, Sir Hilton," she said; "they will not tell you anything."

Every one looked at her with surprise, except Mrs. Gunning. That lady now felt sure that the man Florian had met clandestinely, was the unhappy John Trewavas.

"Why, Flo, you are talking nonsense," exclaimed her brother. "How can you possibly know that the police will withhold any information from Sir Hilton?"

But Florian did not heed him; her small hand still grasped Sir Hilton's arm, and, bending down her head, she whispered in his ear:

"Wait till to-morrow; wait, I entreat you, for your brother's sake. If by to-morrow evening you have heard nothing, come to me, and I will give you news."

While she whispered this, Mr. Gunning was making one of his nasal remarks in his loudest manner, and as it was a favorite idea of Herbert's that his sister was "spooney" on Sir Hilton, he was gallant enough to give all his attention to the Gunning nose. Hence Sir Hilton's sudden paleness and extreme wonder passed unnoticed by all but Mrs. Gunning.

"For mercy's sake, Miss Langley——" he began.

"Hush!" whispered Florian, in great distress; "to-morrow evening; I am not at liberty to speak now. Spare me, I entreat you, and promise you will wait."

Her agitation, her evident fear of being heard, influenced Sir Hilton, in spite of himself.

"I promise," he said, softly; "but I must pass twenty four hours of anguish."

His face was full of amazement, and bowing to Florian, he quitted the room hurriedly. But the young lady followed him, and once more the light touch of her trembling hand arrested his steps.

"Have patience," she said, gently; "it will only be till to-morrow. Others have had so much patience—have borne so much for you. And remember, I have your promise."

She waved her hand to him, and fled up the stairs quickly. She intended to go to her own room, but on the landing—the one above the drawing room door—stood Mrs. Gunning. She looked stern and pale, and coming forward hurriedly, she seized Florian's hand.

"What is this you are doing?" she cried. "You are mad, Florian, to mix yourself with this business."

"What business?" asked Florian, faintly, striving to release her hand.

"This business of John Trewavas's disappearance," replied Mrs Gunning. "You may deceive your blind mother, Florian Langley, but you cannot deceive me."

"Mrs Gunning!" exclaimed Florian, indignantly.

"Be angry if you like, my dear," said Mrs. Gunning; "it doesn't matter. I have known you since you were six years old, and I can bear your anger for your own sake, else my friendship is worth little."

"Then you confess friendship must bear something—friendship must be active, not passive?" cried Florian, eagerly.

"Friendship!" said Mrs. Gunning; "I wish I could think you were acting from friendship, Florian, Florian! It is love, not friendship, that has led you and her astray."

"Yes know I meet him?" she said.

"I know it; and I warn you, Florian, your love can only end in pain, agony, perhaps death," replied Mrs. Gunning. "Save yourself while there is yet time, Florian. Promise me you will never see him again."

"I cannot promise you," said Florian. "I must see him again, even this evening."

"Florian Langley, you are mad!" exclaimed Mrs. Gunning, rising, and pacing the room angrily. "Must I break your mother's heart with this story? Will you force me to call upon your brother to save you?"

"No, no!" cried Florian. "Oh, Mrs. Gunning, I entreat you to listen to me! If you speak to my brother you will bring down such pain and misery upon my head that I shall die of it."

"Can it be worse pain than you will bring upon yourself, Florian, if you persist in this course? Do you know what you are doing?" said Mrs. Gunning, drawing nearer to the trembling girl, and standing before her.

"Yes, I know what I am doing," replied Florian, in a very low, gentle voice. "I know I am destroying my own happiness, but it is too late to let such a reason draw me back. Oh, Mrs. Gunning, when I first met him, could I tell that I was going to be so weak, so wicked, so foolish, as to love him?"

Sobbing, as though her heart would break, she let her head droop upon her hands, while her tears fell fast.

"Love him!" repeated Mrs. Gunning, with an indescribable accent of loathing. "Has he ever dared to speak one word of love to you?"

"No, never! I swear to you, never!" cried Florian. "Are not all his thoughts with another?"

The pain, the bitter, yet meek sorrow of her words rang through Mrs. Gunning's ears, filling her veins with anger. She turned and gazed upon the anguish of the girl, for a moment, in silence, then she bent over her, saying in a low, clear whisper, "Florian, I ask once more do you know what you are doing? Do you know who killed Eleanor Martlowe?"

The horror in her voice, the shrinking terror with which she glanced around, showed that Mrs. Gunning asked this question with extreme reluctance.

"I am afraid I guess," replied Florian, with face growing pale as her own. "And you heard what Sir Hilton said just now. Oh, Mrs. Gunning, have pity on me! Keep my miserable secret; don't kill me with pain and shame."

The deep carnation that spread over her face and neck seemed to burn her with its glow as she flung herself down on the cushion to hide it.

"I will keep your secret," said Mrs. Gunning, compassionately; "but these clandestine meetings must cease at once; they are a disgrace to you."

"No; I deny that!" exclaimed Florian, raising her head indignantly. "You mistake me and him. Have I not already told you that he has never spoken one word of love to me?—never will speak it?" she added, as she hid her face again.

"Then why has he sought you out? why has he met you again and again?" asked Mrs. Gunning, incredulously.

"To entreat me to help him to find Olive Varcoe—to talk always, always of her—to beseech me to search for her, and give her a refuge till he clears her name," replied Florian.

"Oh!" said Mrs. Gunning, grimly, "he wants to find poor little Olive does he? He wants to do her justice at last."

"It is all his thought, all he lives for, I think," said Florian, in her saddest voice. "And I have striven so hard, Mrs. Gunning, to find that poor girl. And all in vain. I want to give her a home here. I cannot bear to see his misery about her, his anguish, and sickness of heart. He knows her innocent, and he fears that her silent martyrdom will crush her into the grave. She has hidden herself from him—from everyone——"

"Who can wonder at that?" interrupted Mrs. Gunning, fiercely. "Have not the Trewavases driven that little creature out into the world, to suffer for their pride's sake, and to die for them if she will? Ah! the tale of that girl's sufferings would make a long romance, Florian Langley."

"I know it," she said; "she is a noble, generous girl, worthy of the chivalrous devotion of a brave heart."

Tears checked her utterance; but, recovering herself she went on more calmly.

"Therefore, my dear Mrs Gunning, I want to shield her, if I can, from further suffering. And this was my first reason for meeting him. I had a note from him, imploring me to give him news of her if I could. He was aware that she had been my companion, and he was in hopes that I knew where she was, but I did not; and when I wrote telling him this, his answer was so full of sorrow, and he besought me so earnestly, by my affection, my interest in Opal Vassilitart, to give him my aid in his anxious search for her, that I resolved to see him. I had no adviser. Pity for my poor blind mother whose belief in Olive's guilt I cannot overcome, and whose peace would be thoroughly gone if she knew I

BOARD OF TRADE.

Their First Annual Meeting Since Organizing—Officers Elected.

The first annual meeting of the Orangeville board of trade took place in the council chamber on Friday evening. The attendance, we are sorry to say, was small, very small indeed. It is very discouraging to the officers of the board to work hard and spend their time in advancing the interests of the town when their efforts, to all appearance, are not appreciated. Those who have the best interests of the town at heart should make it a point to attend the board's meetings in future and help the good work on.

Mr. W. T. Bailey, the efficient secretary of the organization, read the minutes of the last meeting, which were approved.

AN UNSOLVED PROBLEM.

THE adequate punishment of crime is a problem which has vexed all governments from the earliest dawn of civilization down to the present time and is still unsolved. Nothing better than the treatment of crime and criminals marks the progress of enlightened government. The barbarities inflicted on defenseless criminals and suspects in Russia shows more than anything else the barbarism of that great country. Then the greatest crimes are committed and the most atrocious cruelties perpetrated in the name of justice. Nothing has been so potent a factor in the admitted lapse into barbarism of that country as its treatment of criminals, and for aught we know much of the tribulations of that distressed country have resulted from that cause.

In this country, and especially in the neighboring republic, the tendency is the other way. In many cases condemned criminals, even under the shadow of the gallows, are made special objects of interest, and are often treated by weak-minded sentimentalists as if they were martyrs to the law instead of offenders against the law, such people not thinking of the crime committed or of the home made desolate by a cold-blooded and cruel murder, as particularly exemplified in some quarters in the Birchall case, all sympathy going out towards the murderer, forgetting the one murdered or his bereaved and distressed family. Such sentiment is not wisdom, but the worst kind of foolishness, and calculated to encourage rather than diminish crime.

Every person understands the purpose of penal discipline; but to understand what punishment should be meted out for each particular crime and what course would prove the most satisfactory influence, both as regards the culprit and the public, is quite another affair. Punishment should be just and exemplary, but not vengeful. Wrongdoers should understand that all crime must be atoned for, either by restitution where practical, or by suffering, according to the nature of the offence committed. What that punishment should be will always be a debatable question. A maximum and a minimum have been fixed by the legislature. There is, therefore, no hard and fast rule which can be invoked in dealing out retributive justice, and much is left to the discretion of the court dealing with convicted criminals. This being the case, the individual characteristics or idiosyncracies of the court always plays a prominent part. One judge thinks a certain crime a venial offence, while another judge looks with abhorrance upon what his brother judge considers a pardonable, if not a laudable weakness. Some judges always assign an offender to the maximum penalty, while others are content with the minimum. The least versed in criminal jurisprudence can readily see that there is no justice in such disposal of criminals. In inflicting punishment many things have to be taken into account: The malignity of the crime, the education and environments of the offender, the force of habit, the power of passion, the diseases of the brain, the result of hereditary, the effect of poverty and wealth, and how society can best be served in the matter. If a prisoner has sunken so low in crime as to preclude all hope of being restored to good citizenship and would continue a menace to the public, then he has fairly earned, and justice demands, that he receives the utmost limit permitted for the offence of which he has been convicted. But if on the other hand, if there are reasonable hopes that he can be returned to society, the same justice demands that the door of reputable citizenship be opened to the unfortunate, and that he be given an opportunity to reform and placed in the way of well doing. Punishment there must be, but when a prisoner has expiated his crime, efforts should be made to restore him to society and usefulness. Nothing can be more cruel and unjust than the treatment accorded to discharged prisoners. They are turned out without means, with a reputation tarnished, and, as it were, with the mark of Cain upon their forehead; they are treated with suspicion and distrust and discouraged at every step, and many who under better influences, would be restored to good citizenship, have by the cruelty and neglect of the multitude been driven backward and downward until the last hope is wrecked and the unfortunate fills a dishonored grave.

In this view we warmly appreciate some of the recommendations of the voluminous and able report of the Prison Reform Comission, issued by the Ontario government, and particularly hope, amongst other reforms to see a Prison Gate Mission opened in every county, whose object will be the encouragement of prisoners who have served out their time, and who, under good guidance and influences, may become good and industrious citizens, and in some degree help to usher in that glad time when righteousness shall be the rule, not the exception. Budha prays that pity be shown to the vicious as pity has been shown to the virtuous by making them so, and so pray we.

CALEDON.

JUST WHAT WE WANTED.—An Orangeville merchant is here to-day and is selling off cheap overcoats and t'rs. A great many will take advantage of the sale and reap a rich harvest.

RETURNED.—Mrs. Robt. Wallace, nee Miss Rutledge, returned last week from Fort Dodge, Iowa. Mr. Wallace has been here for some time and they will take up their residence on the Wallace farm, lot 16, 3rd line west. We welcome these back to Caledon.... Mr. George Atkinson returned home last week from New Westminster, B. C., where he spent the past six weeks with his son, Mr. T. C. Atkinson. Mrs. Atkinson who accompanied her husband will not return until spring. T. C's. friends here will be glad to learn that he is prospering in the West, and has a large law practice and is new police magistrate of that town.... Mrs. Boscoul was here last week and removed her furniture to Michigan.

GRAVEYARD MORE ACT

In the Municipal Drama and the Curtain will be Rung Down.

All the members of the council were present on Monday evening, as also were the press representatives. Space will not permit us to give an extended report of the business transacted, but we will try to summarize everything in as brief a manner as possible.

Mayor Walsh read a communication from the H. S. Girls' Beneficent Society requesting the use of the town hall free of charge for a charity concert and supper to-morrow (Friday) evening. It was granted.

The "monthly" report of the officers of the fire brigade was read. It recommended the purchase of a number of articles for the fire hall.

Reeve Wauchrough of Amaranth requested a reduction of last year's taxes on some town property. No action was taken.

A dozen dancers successfully ran the gauntlet, after which Reeve Lindsay read the treasurer's statement for November, which showed the usual overdrawn account at the Bank of Commerce.

IT WORKS WELL.

Ald. Gillespie read the F. & W. report which stated that the steam heating apparatus at the waterworks gave good satisfaction, and saved $30 a year in coal. The new hose reel was up to expectations; the engine and pumps had been repaired and worked well; and the firemen would be able to throw water on a fire five minutes after an alarm was given. Adopted.

The Assessment committee's report, which was read by Ald. Green, recommended a $2 reduction in Mr. R. Moore's assessment.

Ald. Ketchum said he would have an R. & B. report ready for next meeting.

Mr. McKitrick gave notice that he would introduce a by law to prohibit children riding on car platforms, hanging on sleighs, coasting and skating on the sidewalks.

Two by laws providing for the holding of nominations and elections and appointing deputy-returning officers and polling-booths were passed.

Mr. Ketchum inquired why the incandescent lamps were not placed in the town hall and council chamber. Nobody appeared to know.

The mayor wanted to find out if a snow shoveller had been engaged for the West ward. The man who wields the shovel was laid up with a cold.

The time for the return of the collector's roll was extended till the 15th of this month.

Several errors were discovered in the assessors' roll and the assessment committee will rectify them.

The aldermen then dispersed, their next meeting taking place on the 15th inst.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE last act in the Centre Wellington election petition against Mr. A. Semple and the cross petition against Mr. W. H. Hunter took place at Guelph on Monday, when both petitions were dismissed.

IT is not expected that Reeve Henry of Caledon will be asked to step down and out, but the opinion that he will be re elected by acclamation is gaining currency. Mr. Henry seems to have pleased the electors pretty well, but a dark horse may be trotted out on nomination day.

MR. R. S. WHITE, Cardwell's young and able member in the Dominion house, arrived in town on Saturday and is paying a brief visit to his constituents. Mr. White is becoming more popular in Cardwell every day, and the electors are well satisfied with him as their representative. He will leave for home on Saturday.

MONO is very quiet at present and no new candidates have announced their intention of running for the reeveship. Messrs. Island and Snell are canvassing hard and the battle promises to be very stubbornly contested. It is the general impression that this will be one of the closest contests on record, and it would not be safe to bet much money on either side.

THERE'S a deep feeling in the township of Amaranth that Deputy-reeve Johnston should be elevated to the highest position in the gift of the ratepayers of that municipality; and we may add THE SUN coincides in that belief. Mr. Johnston has very ably filled the office of deputy-reeve for the past five years, and he makes a shrewd official. The ratepayers should recognize merit and elect Mr. Johnston their next chief-magistrate.

THERE may be a great deal more excitement over the East Luther municipal elections than many at present expect. The Grand Valley correspondent of the Shelburne Economist says: "We have been informed that it is the intention of the temperance party to cause a vote to be taken on local option the same day that the voting for municipal officers takes place. This will certainly be economical, but will tend to make the election hotter. If the two are held on the same day it will be the liveliest day East Luther ever saw."

THERE was really much enthusiasm for Mr. Hyman during the election campaign in London last March. There was cause for it. It came out in court the other day that at a meeting of the colored voters, numbering about fifty, not less than twenty four gallons of beer had been provided for the entertainment. There was also a band and a supply of pickled pigs' feet. The pickled pigs' feet promoted thirst in the throats of the partakers, and the beer was there to quench the thirst. And the voter's stomach being thus filled with feet and his heart warmed by the libations of beer, what more natural than his vote should go to the providers of the good things. Verily, there was cause for Mr. Hyman's election.

OUR municipal reporter had a prolonged interview with Mr. John Gillespie, the ex-king of Amaranth, in the reading room of a Broadway hotel last Saturday. When the scribe ventured to inquire if it was Mr. Gillespie's intention to re-enter municipal politics the latter threw up his hands and burst forth into a long laugh. He said he had not the least intention of coming out for the reeveship, as he had retired from the ring for good, and he wished THE SUN would make the ratepayers of Amaranth acquainted with the fact. A requisition was being circulated inviting Mr. G. to contest the office of reeve, but he requested the interested parties to withdraw the document and they complied with his request. "No, you can tell the people that I'm not in it," said the ex reeve as the reporter took his departure.

BOARD OF TRADE.

Yearly (First Annual) Meeting—Officers Organized—Officers Elected.

The first annual meeting of the Orangeville board of trade took place in the council chamber on Friday evening. The attendance, we are sorry to say, was small, very small indeed. It is very discouraging to the officers of the board to work hard and spend their time in advancing the interests of the town when their efforts, to all appearance, are not appreciated. Those who have the best interests of the town at heart should make it a point to attend the board's meetings in future and help the good work on.

Mr. W. T. Bailey, the efficient secretary of the organization, read the minutes of the last meeting, which were approved.

THEY SUPPORTED IT.

The secretary of the Owen Sound board of trade corresponded with our board and asked their co-operation in petitioning the Legislative Assembly to extend the jurisdiction of the division court, also that division courts should sit more frequently. The Owen Sound people want to be able to sue open debts of $300 and signed documents of $500. The board thought this would supply a "long felt want" and they unanimously decided to support the movement.

WANT A BUSINESS TAX.

The Chatham board of trade is very anxious to change some of the municipal machinery, and asked Orangeville to join with them in petitioning Oliver Mowat's parliament to substitute a business tax instead of the assessment of stock, which may or may not be the property of the merchant. This question requires a good deal of thinking and a committee of Messrs. J. S. Leighton, Geo. Endacott and R. Mann was appointed to deal with the matter.

NEW OFFICERS.

The election of officers was the next business. It was suggested to re-elect the whole staff, but the officials would not stand it. Mr. George Endacott was elevated to the president's chair, and the retiring president, Mr. Thos. Stevenson, made an appropriate reply to a vote of thanks which the board tendered him. Secretary Bailey wanted to make way for another man, but he could not very well be spared and he was prevailed upon to hold office. A vote of thanks was also tendered to Mr. Bailey, and he made a good speech in reply.

The board will give an oyster supper at an early date, and Messrs. Stevenson, Dodds, Still, Turner and Mann were appointed to make the necessary arrangements.

The local press was given a vote of thanks for the kind manner in which the papers treated the board.

The new officers are: Geo. Endacott, president; J. S. Leighton, vice president; W. T. Bailey, secretary; T. L. Mercer, treasurer; J. R. Dodds, T. MacAdam, A. Johnston, G. Beswick, G. Endacott, T Stevenson, R. Mann, T. L. Mercer, A. Turner, G. R. Monkman, W. W. Ruthven, W. Fleming, W. Still, W. T. Bailey, R. Westrop, Executive council; T. Stevenson, R. Mann, W. Still, J. S. Leighton G. R. Monkman, Market committee: G. Endacott, D. McDonald, R. Mann, A. Johnston, W. W. Ruthven, Railway committee; T. Stevenson, W. Still, J. R. Dodds, A. Turner, R. Mann, Manufacturing committee.

CAMILLA.

GOOD SALE.—Articles went very cheap at Mrs. South's sale last week, but everything was disposed of. Mr. James South will work the homestead. Success, Jim.

THIS EVENING.—A meeting of the Bible society is to be held in the Presbyterian church this evening. A good crowd should attend.

KICKED ON THE THIGH.—A couple of days ago Mr. John Howard received a severe kick on the thigh from a horse. He was knocked out for the time but is able to be around again.

THE VERY LATEST.—Sam McKee has caught a cold——or more properly speaking a cold has caught him. Sam took off his coat while he was observing burglars and just about that time the cold came along. Moral—never take off your coat.

HERE AND THERE.—Mr. Thos Wright is visiting friends at Bummersville and Glenoe .... Mr. James Walker is renewing old acquaintances at Camilla.... Mr. George Doney is assisting his brother blacksmithing and he is a clinker at horse-shoeing.

JOCOLER JOHN RETURNS.—Mr. J. H. L. Lewis has returned to Camilla once more and he earnestly requested us not to publish his dream this week. He says he will try good and hard to dream a better dream next week. John told us on the q. t. that he would insert a clause in the dream about would-be councillors.

HA! HA! WAH!—By the great goo whittakers, we had a great big thundering laugh at all the vain attempts to find out who we were. The two demagogues at the school had to procure affidavits from a notary public to prove that they were not the "guilty" parties. Nearly every man who can make his mark (X) has been blamed for the spicy Camilla news which appears every week in Dufferin's great newspaper, but they haven't caught this chicken yet. We lunch on the atmosphere and sleep on the telegraph wire, and it will take a slick allck to get onto our shape. How's that for superfluity?

THE CHAIRS THAT FALLED.—Imagine a room 24x18, well furnished with yellow chairs, small tables, large windows and containing A.O.U.W. and S.O.I.P.A. charters. Come up in imagination and gaze upon the room filled with seven sons of the Emerald Isle, assembled here for the purpose of investigating the charges against Bro. Morrison preferred by Bro. Hewitt. There were only two witnesses, David Allen and John Shakspeare Phenix. J. A. Hewitt retained young Bob Bremner as his counsel and clerk. The court opened by Bro. Hewitt reading the charge, which accused Mr. Morrison of writing articles in the Post paper, said articles slandering Mr Hewitt, and called upon Mr. Morrison to clear himself of the charge. Mr. Morrison then accused Bro. Hewitt of writing the Camilla items for THE SUN, when both gentlemen pleaded "not guilty," to the charges. John Shakspeare Phenix was the first witness and he swore that W. J. Morrison read to him similiar articles which appeared in the Post one day when he was in the bar-room. Mr. Morrison cross-questioned the witness, but Shakspeare John's testimony could not be shaken and he returned triumphantly. David Allen's evidence went against Mr. Morrison, after which the latter gave the reason for blaming Mr. Hewitt as being the correspondent for THE SUN, and explained regarding Phenix's evidence. Bob Bremner testified that he never had any intercourse with Mr. Hewitt as to what appeared in THE SUN. He produced an affidavit from the editor of THE SUN to the effect that he was in no way connected with the correspondence, and this cleared him. Mr. Hewitt handed out a similiar document, and this satisfied every body that he had no connection with the articles. All left the hall except the committee of investigation. After considering the evidence the committee returned the following verdict: "That Bro. Morrison be expelled till such time that he can prove that he did not write the articles in the Post concerning Bro. Hewitt." Mr. Hewitt now fills Mr. Morrison's place as secretary.

T. Stevenson, issuer of Marriage Licenses. A large supply of Blanks kept constantly on hand. Medical Hall, Broadway, Orangeville.

PLEASANT TIME.—On Wednesday a surprise party from Grand Valley dropped in on Mr. W. H. White and spent a pleasant evening in dancing and other amusements.

NOT IN IT.—We had a big notice of coming out for councillor or reeve; but we have given up the idea since Island and Snell are doing it up in elegant style, but we're not in it.

HOWDY THE STARS LIKE.—Mr. George Moffatt of Glenavon has purchased the Rosemont stage line, and he intends to start business the first of the new year. We wish him success.

WOOD BEE.—Mr. R. J. Wilson had a large wood bee on Wednesday, and about 50 cords of wood were cut. A large number of the boys and girls were present, and the evening was spent in dancing.

ANOTHER CONCERT.—Preparations are being made for a concert and tea in aid of the Methodist church here to be held on Christmas night. A good program is being prepared and we hope to see a good attendance.

THEY ALL ENJOYED IT.—The concert given here on Monday evening was a most enjoyable affair, and everybody enjoyed it immensely. A number from Orangeville taking part in the program which was carried out to the letter and the proceeds were large.

GOING AGAIN.—Samuel S. Fleming has moved his saw-mill up to the 1st line, Adjala, and has commenced work in good style. The mill site is that of James Bowers, who is making things hum in your town. Sam is a hustler and gets there every time.

THAT'S WHAT WE WANT.—Say, Mr. Editor, you should get a regular correspondent at this lively centre. Lots of news is not chronicled in the papers, and we would like to see it in THE SUN. You are getting out a newsy paper and we don't like to see our village news left out of your columns.

THE CANDIDATES.—It is our opinion that Mr. Island will get a great many votes here for the reeveship contest. The city of Hockley intends running a man for the council and Messrs. W. H. Moffatt and Wm. Fleming are spoken of as probable candidates. Either of these gentlemen would make a first-class councillor.

SYMPATHY FOR SHINNIMAN.—A great deal of sympathy is felt for the boy Shinniman, who has been committed to stand his trial for the murder of J. A. Montgomery. The unfortunate affair took place in this village, as everybody will remember. Shinniman is a quiet hardworking boy, and general sympathy is manifested in his behalf.

A GREAT SUCCESS.—The church opening here on Sunday was a greater success than the most sanguine expected, and crowds attended each service. The rev. gentlemen's discourses were listened to with great attention by the congregation. Great credit is due Rev. A. C. Watt, who worked very hard to establish a church of his persuasion here. We hope the new church of St. James will live long and flourish.

BUCHANAN—LINDSAY.—On Wednesday last week the residence of Mr. J. B. Lindsay, V. S., was the scene of a very pleasing incident, being the marriage of his daughter, Miss Ella, to Mr. W. J. Buchanan. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. C. Watt, rector of the parish, in the presence of a large number of invited guests. The bride was handsomely attired and was assisted in a graceful manner by Miss Aggie Hackett, while Mr. W. Henry of Mono Centre supported the groom. The bride was the recipient of a large number of beautiful presents. The wedding dinner was magnificent, after which an enjoyable dance was engaged in. The happy young couple will reside on lot 15, 4th line, Mono. Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan have the best wishes of their many friends for a long life of wedded bliss.

Lots of Private Trust & Co.'s Funds to loan by R. E. Hamilton of Grand Valley, at 6 per cent. yearly, and large loans at even less rates. Borrower can repay on account of principal in any year he wishes and expenses low.

The barbarities inflicted on defenceless criminals and suspects in Russia shows more than anything else the barbarism of that great country. Then the greatest crimes are committed and the most atrocious brutalities perpetrated in the name of justice. Nothing has been so potent a factor in the admitted lapse into barbarism of that country as its treatment of criminals, and for aught we know much of the tribulations of that distressed country have resulted from that cause.

In this country, and especially in the neighboring republic, the tendency is the other way. In many cases condemned criminals, even under the shadow of the gallows, are made special objects of interest, and are often treated by weak-minded sentimentalists as if they were martyrs to the law instead of offenders against the law, such people not thinking of the crime committed or of the home made desolate by a cold-blooded and cruel murder, as particularly exemplified in some quarters in the Birchall case, all sympathy going out towards the murderer, forgetting the one murdered or his bereaved and distressed family. Such sentiment is not wisdom, but the worst kind of foolishness, and calculated to encourage rather than diminish crime.

Every person understands the purpose of penal discipline; but to understand what punishment should be meted out for each particular crime and what course would prove the most satisfactory influence, both as regards the culprit and the public, is quite another affair. Punishment should be just and exemplary, but not vengeful. Wrongdoers should understand that all crime must be atoned for, either by restitution where practical, or by suffering, according to the nature of the offence committed. What that punishment should be will always be a debatable question. A maximum and a minimum have been fixed by the legislature. There is, therefore, no hard and fast rule which can be invoked in dealing out retributive justice, and much is left to the discretion of the court dealing with convicted criminals. This being the case, the individual characteristics or idiosyncracies of the court always plays a prominent part. One judge thinks a certain crime a venial offence, while another judge looks with abhorrence upon what his brother judge considers a pardonable, if not a laudable weakness. Some judges always assign an offender to the maximum penalty, while others are content with the minimum. The least versed in criminal jurisprudence can readily see that there is no justice in such disposal of criminals. In inflicting punishment many things have to be taken into account: The malignity of the crime, the education and environments of the offender, the force of habit, the power of passion, the diseases of the brain, the result of hereditary, the effect of poverty and wealth, and how society can best be served in the matter. If a prisoner has sunken so low in crime as to preclude all hope of being restored to good citizenship and would continue a menace to the public, then he has fairly earned, and justice demands, that he receives the utmost limit permitted for the offence of which he has been convicted. But if on the other hand, if there are reasonable hopes that he can be returned to society, the same justice demands that the door of reputable citizenship be opened to the unfortunate, and that he be given an opportunity to reform and placed in the way of well doing. Punishment there must be, but when a prisoner has expiated his crime, efforts should be made to restore him to society and usefulness. Nothing can be more cruel and unjust than the treatment accorded to discharged prisoners. They are turned out without means, with a reputation tarnished, and, as it were, with the mark of Cain upon their foreheads; they are treated with suspicion and distrust and discouraged at every step, and many who under better influences, would be restored to good citizenship, have by the cruelty and neglect of the multitude been driven backward and downward until the last hope is wrecked and the unfortunate fills a dishonored grave.

In this view we warmly appreciate some of the recommendations of the voluminous and able report of the Prison Reform Comission, issued by the Ontario government, and particularly hope, amongst other reforms to see a Prison Gate Mission opened in every county, whose object will be the encouragement of prisoners who have served out their time, and who, under good guidance and influence, may become good and industrious citizens, and in some degree help to usher in that glad time when righteousness shall be the rule, not the exception. Budha prays that pity be shown to the vicious as pity has been shown to the virtuous by making them so, and so pray we.

CALEDON.

Just What we Wanted.—An Orangeville merchant is here to-day and is selling off cheap overcoats and t's. A great many will take advantage of the sale and reap a rich harvest.

Returned.—Mrs. Robt. Wallace, nee Miss Rutledge, returned last week from Fort Dodge, Iowa. Mr. Wallace has been here for some time and they will take up their residence on the Wallace farm, lot 16, 3rd line west. We welcome them back to Caledon.... Mr. George Atkinson returned home last week from New Westminster, B. C., where he spent the past six weeks with his son, Mr. T. C. Atkinson. Mrs. Atkinson who accompanied her husband will not return until spring. T. C's. friends here will be glad to learn that he is prospering in the West, and has a large law practice and is new police magistrate of that town.... Mrs. Beacond was here last week and removed her furniture to Michigan.

A dozen dancers successfully run the gauntlet, after which Reeve Lindsay read the treasurer's statement for November, which showed the usual overdraw account at the Bank of Commerce.

IT WORKS WELL.

Ald. Gillespie read the F. & W. report which stated that the steam heating apparatus at the waterworks gave good satisfaction, and saved $30 a year in coal. The new hose-reel was up to expectations; the engine and pumps had been repaired and worked well; and the firemen would be able to throw water on a fire five minutes after an alarm was given. Adopted.

The Assessment committee's report, which was read by Ald. Greer, recommended a $2 reduction in Mr. R. Moore's assessment.

Ald. Ketchum said he would have an E. & B. report ready for next meeting.

Mr. McKitrick gave notice that he would introduce a by-law to prohibit children riding on car platforms, hanging on sleighs, coasting and skating on the sidewalks.

Two by-laws providing for the holding of nominations and elections and appointing deputy-returning officers and polling-booths were passed.

Mr. Ketchum inquired why the incandescent lamps were not placed in the town hall and council chamber. Nobody appeared to know.

The mayor wanted to find out if a snow shoveller had been engaged for the West ward. The man who wields the shovel was laid up with a cold.

The time for the return of the collector's roll was extended till the 16th of this month.

Several errors were discovered in the assessors' roll and the assessment committee will rectify them.

The aldermen then dispersed, their next meeting taking place on the 15th inst.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The last act in the Centre Wellington election petition against Mr. A. Semple and the cross petition against Mr. W. H. Hunter took place at Guelph on Monday, when both petitions were dismissed.

It is not expected that Reeve Henry of Caledon will be asked to step down and out, but the opinion that he will be re-elected by acclamation is gaining currency. Mr. Henry seems to have pleased the electors pretty well, but a dark horse may be trotted out on nomination day.

Mr. R. S. White, Cardwell's young and able member in the Dominion house, arrived in town on Saturday and is paying a brief visit to his constituents. Mr. White is becoming more popular in Cardwell every day, and the electors are well satisfied with him as their representative. He will leave for home on Saturday.

Mono is very quiet at present and no new candidates have announced their intention of running for the reeveship. Messrs. Island and Snell are canvassing hard and the battle promises to be very stubbornly contested. It is the general impression that this will be one of the closest contests on record, and it would not be safe to bet much money on either side.

There's a deep feeling in the township of Amaranth that Deputy-reeve Johnston should be elevated to the highest position in the gift of the ratepayers of that municipality; and we may add The Sun coincides in that belief. Mr. Johnston has very ably filled the office of deputy-reeve for the past five years, and he makes a shrewd official. The ratepayers should recognize merit and elect Mr. Johnston their next chief-magistrate.

There may be a great deal more excitement over the East Luther municipal elections than many at present expect. The Grand Valley correspondent of the Shelburne Economist says: "We have been informed that it is the intention of the temperance party to cause a vote to be taken on local option the same day that the voting for municipal officers takes place. This will certainly be economical, but will tend to make the election hotter. If the two are held on the same day it will be the liveliest day East Luther ever saw."

There was really much enthusiasm for Mr. Hyman during the election campaign in London last March. There was cause for it. It came out in court the other day that at a meeting of the colored voters, numbering about fifty, not less than twenty four gallons of beer had been provided for the entertainment. There was also a band and a supply of pickled pigs' feet. The pickled pigs' feet promoted thirst in the throats of the partakers, and the beer was there to quench the thirst. And the voter's stomach being thus filled with feet and his heart warmed by the libations of beer, what more natural than his vote should go to the providers of the good things. Verily, there was cause for Mr. Hyman's election.

Our municipal reporter had a prolonged interview with Mr. John Gilles pie, the ex-king of Amaranth, in the reading room of a Broadway hotel last Saturday. When the scribe ventured to inquire if it was Mr. Gillespie's intention to enter municipal politics the latter threw up his hands and burst forth into a long laugh. He said he had not the least intention of coming out for the reeveship, as he had retired from the ring for good, and he wished The Sun would make the ratepayers of Amaranth acquainted with the fact. A requisition was being circulated inviting Mr. G. to contest the office of reeve, but he requested the interested parties to withdraw the document and they complied with his request. "No, you can tell the people that I'm not in it," said the ex-reeve as the reporter took his departure.

board and asked them an question in petitioning the Legislative Assembly to extend the jurisdiction of the division court so that division courts should sit more frequently. The Cross Sound people want to be able to sue upon debts of $200 and upwards. The board thought this would supply a long felt want, and they unanimously decided to support the movement.

WANT A BUSINESS TAX.

The Chatham board of trade is very anxious to change some of the municipal machinery, and asked Orangeville to join with them in petitioning Oliver Mowat's parliament to substitute a business tax instead of the assessment of stock, which may or may not be the property of the merchant. This question requires a good deal of thinking and a committee of Messrs. J. S. Leighton, Geo. Endacott and R. Mann was appointed to deal with the matter.

NEW OFFICERS.

The election of officers was the next business. It was suggested to re-elect the whole staff, but the officials would not stand it. Mr. George Endacott was elevated to the president's chair, and the retiring president, Mr. Thos. Stevenson, made an appropriate reply to a vote of thanks which the board tendered him. Secretary Bailey wanted to make way for another man, but he could not very well be spared and he was prevailed upon to hold office. A vote of thanks was also tendered to Mr. Bailey, and he made a good speech in reply.

The board will give an oyster supper at an early date, and Messrs. Stevenson, Dodds, Still, Turner and Mann were appointed to make the necessary arrangements.

The local press was given a vote of thanks for the kind manner in which the papers treated the board.

The new officers are: Geo. Endacott, president; J. S. Leighton, vice president; W. T. Bailey, secretary; T. L. Mercer, treasurer; J. R. Dodds, T. MacAdam, A. Johnston, G. Beswick, G. Endacott, T Stevenson, R. Mann, T. L. Mercer, A. Turner, G. R. Monkman, W. W. Ruthven, W. Fleming, W. Still, W. T. Bailey, R. Westrop, Executive council; T. Stevenson, R. Mann, W. Still, J. S. Leighton G. R. Monkman, Market committee; G. Endacott, D. McDonald, R. Mann, A. Johnston, W. W. Ruthven, Railway committee; T. Stevenson, W. Still, J. R. Dodds, A. Turner, R. Mann, Manufacturing committee.

CAMILLA.

Good Sale.—Articles went very cheap at Mrs. South's sale last week, but everything was disposed of. Mr. James South will work the homestead. Success, Jim.

This Evening.—A meeting of the Bible society is to be held in the Presbyterian church this evening. A good crowd should attend.

Kicked on the Thigh.—A couple of days ago Mr. John Howard received a severe kick on the thigh from a horse. He was knocked out for the time but is able to be around again.

The Very Latest.—Sam McKee has caught a cold——or more properly speaking a cold has caught him. Sam took off his coat while he was observing burglars and just about that time the cold came along. Moral—never take off your coat.

Here and There.—Mr. Thos. Wright is visiting friends at Bammersville and Glenoe .... Mr. James Walker is renewing old acquaintances at Camilla.... Mr. George Doney is assisting his brother blacksmithing and he is a clinker at horse-shoeing.

Jocular John Returns.—Mr. J. H. L. Lewis has returned to Camilla once more and he earnestly requested us not to publish his dream this week. He says he will try good and hard to dream a better dream next week. John told us on the q. t. that he would insert a clause in the dream about wooden-headed councillors.

Ha! Ha! Wan!—By the great gee whittakers, we had a great big thundering laugh at all the vain attempts to find out who we were. The two demagogues at the school had to procure affidavits from a notary public to prove that they were not the "guilty" parties. Nearly every man who can make his mark (X) has been blamed for the spicy Camilla news which appears every week in Dufferin's great newspaper, but they haven't caught this chicken yet. We lunch on the atmosphere and sleep on the telegraph wire, and it will take a slick slick to get onto our shape. How's that for superfluity?

The Change That Failed.—Imagine a room 24x18, well furnished with yellow chairs, small tables, large windows and containing A.O.U.W. and S.O.I.P.A. charters. Come up in imagination and gaze upon the room filled with seven sons of the Emerald Isle, assembled here for the purpose of investigating the charges against Bro. Morrison preferred by Bro. Hewitt. There were only two witnesses, David Allen and John Shakspeare Phenix. J. A. Hewitt retained young Bob Brenner as his counsel and clerk. The court opened by Bro. Hewitt reading the charge, which accused Mr. Morrison of writing articles in the Post paper, said articles slandering Mr Hewitt, and called upon Mr. Morrison to clear himself of the charge. Mr. Morrison then accused Bro. Hewitt of writing the Camilla items for The Sun, when both gentlemen pleaded "not guilty," to the charges. John Shakspeare Phenix was the first witness and he swore that W. J. Morrison read to him similiar articles which appeared in the Post one day when he was in the bar-room. Mr. Morrison cross-questioned the witness, but Shakspeare John's testimony could not be shaken and he returned triumphantly. David Allen's evidence went against Mr. Morrison, after which the latter gave his reasons for blaming Mr. Hewitt as being the correspondent for The Sun, and explained regarding Phenix's evidence. Bob Brenner testified that he never had any intercourse with Mr. Hewitt as to what appeared in The Sun. He produced an affidavit from the editor of The Sun to the effect that he was in no way connected with the correspondence, and this cleared him. Mr. Hewitt handed out a similiar document, and this satisfied everybody that he had no connection with the articles. All left the hall except the committee of investigation. After considering the evidence the committee returned the following verdict: "That Bro. Morrison be expelled till such time that he can prove that he did not write the articles to the Post concerning Bro. Hewitt." Mr. Hewitt now fills Mr. Morrison's place as secretary.

F. Stevenson, Issuer of Marriage Licenses. A large supply of Blanks kept constantly on hand. Medical Hall, Broadway, Orangeville.

is all of the Methodist church here to be held on Christmas night. A good program is being prepared and we hope to see a good attendance.

They all Enjoyed it.—The concert given here on Monday evening was a most enjoyable affair, and everybody enjoyed it immensely. A number from Orangeville taking part in the program which was carried out to the letter and the proceeds were large.

Going Again.—Samuel S. Fleming has moved his saw-mill up to the 1st line, Adjala, and has commenced work in good style. The mill site is that of James Bowers, who is working things from in your town. Sam is a hustler and gets there every time.

That's What we Want.—Say, Mr. Editor, you should get a regular correspondent at this lively centre. Lots of news is not chronicled in the papers, and we would like to see it in The Sun. You are getting out a newsy paper and we don't like to see our village news left out of your columns.

The Candidates.—It is our opinion that Mr. Island will get a great many votes here for the reeveship contest. The city of Hockley intends running a man for the council and Messrs. W. H. Moffatt and Wm. Fleming are spoken of as probable candidates. Either of these gentlemen would make a first-class councillor.

Sympathy for Shinniman.—A great deal of sympathy is felt for the boy Shinniman, who has been committed to stand his trial for the murder of J. A. Montgomery. The unfortunate affair took place in this village, as everybody will remember. Shinniman is a quiet hardworking boy, and general sympathy is manifested in his behalf.

A Great Success.—The church opening here on Sunday was a greater success than the most sanguine expected, and crowds attended each service. The rev. gentleman's discourses were listened to with great attention by the congregation. Great credit is due Rev. A. C. Watt, who worked very hard to establish a church of his persuasion here. We hope the new church of St. James will live long and flourish.

Buchanan—Lindsay.—On Wednesday last week the residence of Mr. J. B. Lindsay, V. S., was the scene of a very pleasing incident, being the marriage of his daughter, Miss Ella, to Mr. W. J. Buchanan. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. C. Watt, rector of the parish, in the presence of a large number of invited guests. The bride was handsomely attired and was assisted in a graceful manner by Miss Aggie Hackett, while Mr. W. Henry of Mono Centre supported the groom. The bride was the recipient of a large number of beautiful presents. The wedding dinner was magnificent, after which an enjoyable dance was engaged in. The happy young couple will reside on lot 15, 4th line, Mono. Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan have the best wishes of their many friends for a long life of wedded bliss.

Fancy goods as holiday presents are in profusion at W. Still's making the best time of work in Canada. Go early and have a choice to complete your purchase.

Lady is cordially invited to the H. S. School Girls' Beneficent Society's tea and concert in the town hall tomorrow (Friday) evening. No admission and all are welcome.

Senior Judge Chadwick has been appointed to the vacant county court judge of Wellington, and Mr. Jameson, Q.C., M.P. for North Ontario, has been appointed junior judge.

MAKE NO MISTAKE.—Have the best raisins and currants; will cost you no more than common fruit. MacAdam's.

YOU WANT—A nice tea or dinner set for Christmas, don't you? Lovely assortment at MacAdam's, and very cheap.

MONEY TO LOAN, CHEAP.—Farmers are paying high rates of interest. Call on W. Still, his terms are the best in Ontario.

SNOW FLAKE PASTRY FLOUR.—The finally choice cake and pastry of the market, to be had only at MacAdam's. It's just lovely. Try it.

A GOOD CROWD.—The McGibeny famous musicians was Tuesday evening's attraction at the town hall. Owing to the unfavorable weather only about 150 people attended, and the program was a fairly good one.

IN AID OF THE GIRLS' AUXILIARY.—Dame Trot intends holding a sale of work in the basement of St. Mark's church on the evening of Thursday next, Dec. 17, commencing at 7 p. m. Proceeds in aid of the Girls' Auxiliary of St. Mark's church. A good program will be provided. Admission fee 5 cts. all around.

SOLD OUT.—Mr. Geo Booth has disposed of his interest in the People's grocery store to Mr. Jas. Leighton, and the latter now owns the whole business. All the butter makers in the country are preparing to win "Jimmy's" prize of a set of dishes for the best tub or crock of butter brought to market next Thursday. See bills for particulars.

AN ENTERTAINING JOURNAL.—Justice Anderson told an information against Ed. Lennox for selling whiskey without a license a couple of Sundays ago, and the case should have been tried at police court on Saturday. Ed. wasn't present, however, and his counsel declined to plead. A mistake was detected in the summons, which accounted for the non appearance of the defendant. The error will be corrected, but no date has been fixed for the trial.

AN EXCELLENT JOURNAL.—Onward, the young people's eight-page weekly, edited by Dr. Withrow, began a year ago, reports very gratifying progress, with a circulation of nearly 27,000. It is emphatically the young people's organ of Canadian Methodism, and furnishes full reports from their many Young People's Societies. It is handsomely illustrated, gives special prominence to temperance and missions, has strong temperance stories, and is very cheap.

A BIG MARKET.—Last Thursday's market was the best attended this year and a great deal of produce was brought in and found a ready sale. Tons of poultry changed hands, and local and foreign buyers hustled themselves pretty lively. Joseph Algie, Mono, captured a year's subscription to a local paper for the best pair of turkeys; pair of geese, Mrs. B. Bradley, East Garafraxa, $1 cash by Judge, Chapman & Co; pair of chickens, J. J. McKelvey, 50 cts by F. Marshall, and also for pail of butter, pair of ladies' slippers by J. W. Wild.

THE BEST PUBLISHED.—The Scientific American advertised in another column under the head of "Patents," certainly needs no one to "sing its praises," but, notwithstanding this fact, we feel it an absolute duty to the general public, at least that portion of it which has never seen or heard of the paper, to tell them that such a "one is published" at the low price of $3 a year, and that its true value cannot be overestimated. It stands at the head of all publications of its kind. A file of the paper may be seen at this office and subscriptions received.

HOLDS GOOD HERE.—The Grimsby Independent gives the boys of that town the following advice, and our own "juveniles" will do well if they think over it seriously: "Why do you stand on the street corner anyway? There are but two proper places for boys on Sunday nights, and those are 'at home' and at church. If you don't want to go to church stay at home. If you don't want to stay at home go to church. But if you really will not or cannot do either of those, for goodness sake go for a walk or a ride, or go crazy, if you like, but don't stand on the street corners."

ANNUAL TEA MEETING.—The annual tea meeting and entertainment at Crawford's appointment, 3rd line of Albion, will take place on Friday, the 18th inst. The supper is going to be excellent and tea will be served from 6 to 7.45 p. m. After tea a first class entertainment will take place. The Caledon East band will furnish instrumental music and songs by Messrs. Wilson and Faulkner, Mono Road, and others; readings and recitations by Messrs Westlake, Langford and others. Chair taken at 8, sharp; admission 25cts, children, 15cts. There should be a large turnout on this occasion.

A NEW COMPANY.—A number of the shareholders of the proposed company to manufacture the McMaster binders met at the Commercial hotel on Tuesday evening for the purpose of organizing. A board of directors, consisting of John A. McMaster, Jas. McMaster, Dr. Lewis, H. Gillespie and D. H. Hunter, were elected. The capital stock of the company is $20000, over $20000 of which has been subscribed, the shares being $100 each. We are glad to see the project carried to a successful issue, and there is no doubt the machine is the simplest and best manufactured in Canada. THE SUN wishes the new company every success.

HORSES AND CATTLE CREMATED.—About 8 o'clock Saturday evening an alarm of fire was sounded and before the bell ceased ringing the firemen were dashing up Broadway with the new hose reel, which then received its first run. The fire, which was beyond the reach of our system, was rapidly devouring old John Fletcher's barn, just across the C.P.R. track on west Broadway. Mr. A. Conley had the structure rented and a mare and colt, several hundred bushels of grain and other articles were consumed. A cow belonging to Fletcher was also burned to death. We are informed that both sufferers were insured. No one seems to know how the fire started.

VISITING SCOTS DOWNED.—The Brampton gun club paid this town a visit on Tuesday of last week and shot against our crack sports. The match took place on the exhibition grounds and the targets were live pigeons. Orangeville, as usual, defeated the visitors the score being, Orangeville 47, Brampton 33, leaving our sports 14 points ahead. The score was:

THE PICKPOCKET AGAIN.—Last Friday Archie Campbell, a well-known character of Mono, came to Orangeville with $60 of hard earned money in his pocket. Archie frequently takes a horn, very frequently too many of them, and this day was no exception to his general rule. After "blowing in" $5 of his capital Archie became helplessly drunk and could not remember anything that happened until he awoke in the sitting-room of the Paisley house the following morning. The first thing Archie did after rubbing the sleep out of his eyes was to search out Mr. Jas. Bennett, proprietor of the hostelry, and demand $55 which he said he gave him for safe-keeping the previous night. The landlord informed Archie that he had not seen him Friday evening. Archie still contended that Mr. Bennett had the money and the latter was forced to eject him from the hotel. Campbell then went to P. M. Pattullo's justice-dispensing establishment and swore out a warrant charging Bennett with stealing $55. Mr. Bennett was arrested and taken before the police-magistrate, who immediately released him on bail. He appeared in the police court on Monday and was committed for trial at the quarter sessions, which were held in the court house yesterday. The grand jury found "no bill" and Mr. Bennett was honorably acquitted.

JOE GETS SCOTT FREE!

Young Alf. Wise Refused to Prosecute Joe Reid for Assault.

The first case that came up for trial at the quarter sessions on Tuesday was that of Alfred Wise, a clerk employed in Denese's grocery store, against Joseph Reid of East Garafraxa, the charge being assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm. The grand jury found a true bill in this case. Readers of THE SUN, no doubt, will remember seeing a report of a fight that occurred in Mrs. Oliver's restaurant at the C.P.R. station almost three months ago and Wise was called in to make peace. In the melee Wise, who is a quiet young fellow, had one of his thumbs almost bitten off and was compelled to quit work for three weeks. He had a summons issued for Reid's arrest and P. M. Pattullo counselled Joe to stand his trial at the quarter sessions.

When the case was called Reid's counsel pleaded a release and read the following

LETTER FROM WISE.

Mr. Joseph Reid.

SIR,—I have received a summons to appear at the general sessions court to prosecute you for your assault upon me sometime since. Your conduct at Hammond's during the last few moments of the unfortunate child's life was such that I feel that I am only doing you justice by withdrawing the charge now against you. You may tell your lawyer that I decline to prosecute. Should the crown go on with the case I shall have to appear and give evidence. I trust that my forgiving you on account of the relief you must have given to the grief-stricken mother will be a lasting lesson to you to keep from quarreling with others and lead a more honorable and upright life, not only for your own sake but also for that of your wife and family.

ALFRED WISE.

Crown Prosecutor Myers contended that the release amounted to a compounding of a misdemeanor and, therefore, was illegal. Reid's solicitor claimed that it was perfectly legal and quoted authorities to support his contention. His honor, Judge McCarthy, said he would reserve the case on that point if it was thought worth while. Mr. Myers ventured the opinion that Reid was making an effort to conduct himself properly and for his part he would not object to the settlement. After a little more talk it was arranged that the prisoner should plead guilty and be released on suspended sentence. He did so and the judge remarked that if Reid would take a lesson and conduct himself in a becoming manner in future nothing more would be heard of this conviction.

It was rumored around town that Wise had been bought off for the sum of $15, but Joe came into THE SUN office Tuesday evening and denied the truth of the report. An intimate friend of young Wise also told our reporter that the statement was false.

CONCERT.—The following program will be rendered at the concert under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society in connection with St. Andrew's church, which will take place on Tuesday evening next, the 15th. No admission fee will be charged but a collection in aid of the society will be taken up. Come and spend a profitable hour. The program is:

REMOVED TO ORANGEVILLE.—Our citizens will learn with regret of the removal of Mr. H. M. Watson from the management of the Bank of Hamilton in this place to Orangeville. Mr. Watson has been a resident of Georgetown so long that he had become identified with her interests and had a keen regard for her prosperity. He was always exceedingly liberal in his help to local enterprises and as a citizen was exceptionally useful and valuable. In the management of the bank he displayed splendid business ability and gave the patrons of that institution the best satisfaction that lay in his power. He was always courteous and accommodating, while businesslike, in his office and won confidence and respect of those who had dealings with him. We understand it is not Mr Watson's intention to remove his family from here at present.—Georgetown Herald.

A FOOL AND HIS MONEY, ETC.—Hardly two weeks ago Pat Collins, a farm hand hailing from Caledon, struck town with the intention of staying a few days. Pat was not strapped for he had about $75 in bank notes snugly stowed away in his inside coat pocket. But the old saying that "a fool and his money are soon parted" was again verified a couple of days ago. Patrick, like many more men, has a great weakness for strong drink, and shortly after his arrival in town he began to quench his thirst with Orangeville "bug-juice." He must have been terribly thirsty or he would have moved away from the "trough" several days ago. Of course, nobody would expect that Pat's pile would increase very much at the rate he was going, and neither it did, for the aforesaid pile kept growing beautifully less every day. On Tuesday the Caledonian had $10, but some pickpocket relieved him of that and now he's without a penny. Another victim added to the long, long list!

HIS SUFFERINGS ARE OVER.—Last Friday evening Thos. Cole, a man bent with age, arrived at the station from Waldemar and walked up to the jail. He had no committal papers with him, but the kind-hearted governor could not turn him out and he was allowed to occupy a cell at the "castle." The papers arrived on Monday, committing the poor old man to jail for several months on a charge of vagrancy. What a terrible crime it is to be poor! The aged and infirm man was sick before he started on his journey, and it was an inhuman act for the magistrate who committed him to jail that there was no conveyance to take him from the station. Death was following the old man very closely for some time and it finally overtook him yesterday morning. His remains found a resting place in the usual plot in the Town cemetery. Coroner Henry held an inquest later in the day and a verdict of "death from natural causes" was returned. The jury passed the following resolution: Moved by W. Gordon, seconded by Jas. Law, "That in the opinion of the jury empanelled to enquire as to the cause of death of the late Thomas Cole of the township of Amaranth, that the proper authorities should make some provision for the sick and poor that are constantly being sent to the jail for shelter, food and attendance, he living as we do, that jails were never intended for the reception of persons whose only crimes are sickness and poverty."

ONE GENEROUS ORANGEVILLE MAN.

Orangeville is not so Stuck to Self as Some in Potsdam.

By reading certain town papers outside newspaper men seem to have jumped at the conclusion, that Orangeville is one of the toughest towns in the Dominion, but such is not the case, as every citizen of Orangeville can testify. Just keep calm while you read this from the Brampton Times: "Last Sunday week was a day of rest and gaiety in Orangeville. Whiskey flowed just as freely as it was paid for and the spectacle for a Sabbath day was scandalous in the extreme. At one time in the afternoon there were about 50 drunks on the street."

And this is from the Shelburne Free Press: "According to the Orangeville papers the morals of that burg are not improving any. One Sunday evening not long ago, no less than twenty-five drunken men were to be seen on the streets at one time. The above list does not include those who were stowed away taking a quiet sleep. The question naturally arises: Where did they get the whiskey? They should have been examined, probably they each had one of Hossack's recipes in their pockets."

The fact that four drunks met on Broadway the Sunday in question and had a brief fight does not warrant our contemporaries in making the disturbances appear to have been a riot. Very few people know of the affair, as Broadway was all but deserted at the time, and the reports created much unfavorable comment. You can always depend on anything you read in THE SUN.

THEY PROTEST.

To the Editor of THE SUN:

SIR,—There appeared in the Advertiser of Dec. 4th, an injurious note on the High School Beneficent Society. And in defence of the same I write the following:

The writer of that cutting little note must have been dreaming when he spoke of a charity supper, instead of a social tea. So if he did not conceive the practicability of a charity supper, I hope he will of a social tea. He says that even poverty has its pride, so have we human feelings, and would not for one moment think of asking the poorest man, woman, or child in Orangeville to acknowledge their misfortune by partaking of a publicly conducted charity supper. We never thought of such a supper. It is our intention, and has been from the first, to ask them to dine with us as a token of sociability. We simply used the papers as a means of sending invitations which we would gladly have presented personally had we had the time. And if there is any misunderstanding I hope you will not blame the society for it, as we not only mean good, but intend to carry our intentions into effect. What the intentions of the writer of that note were, I cannot imagine. Surely he did not mean to discourage those who were earnestly working for God; if that was his aim, we hope (for the sake of justice) that both high and low, rich and poor, will patronize our social, not charity tea and concert, and join heartily with us in our endeavour to break that cold barrier of unsociability. And now, we ask that well-meaning, practicable, considerate and sensible judge of the H. S. B. S., to step down from his lofty height and show us by deeds, not words, how to conduct a society.

PRESIDENT H. S. B. S.

Orangeville, Dec. 9, '91.

PERSONAL.

Dr. Barr, M. P. P., of Shelburne was in town on Saturday.

Mr. R. T. Haun left for New York on Monday evening on important business.

Mr. John Connor, of the Connor house, Dundalk, was in town on Saturday.

Rev. Jas. Long of Mono Mills favored THE SUN with a pleasant call on Tuesday.

Mr. Jas. Leighton, proprietor of the People's store, was on a business trip to Toronto this week.

Registrar McKim and bride arrived home from their honeymoon trip on Tuesday evening and are now comfortably settled in their residence on Mill street.

Mr. R. S. White, M. P. for Cardwell, gave THE SUN a pleasant call on Tuesday morning. Mr. White looks well and he is enjoying the best of health.

Mrs. B. E. Salinger (nee Miss McKenney) of New York, who has been visiting Sault Ste Marie friends for the past six weeks, is spending a few days with her mother in town.

BOWLING GREEN.

GOING AWAY.—Mr John Banks says that he is going to remove to the Northwest in a few days. Success to you, John, wherever you may go.

HE'S NOT IN IT NOW.—A great shower of snow fell here recently, and sleighs have replaced wagons. This will knock Jimmy Lumb out in the first round and he will have to house his bicycle until the flowers bloom again.

SCARCE AS HENS' TEETH.—News is almost as scarce as hens' teeth, and we hardly know what to write about. You will hear from your Bowling Green scribe a little oftener after this, Mr. Editor.

WOOD-BEE AND DANCE.—Mrs. John Bates had a wood-bee on Friday last and it came off very successful. At night the young people enjoyed themselves in a dance and kept it up until 1 o'clock Saturday morning.

THIEVES AT GRAND VALLEY.—One day last week Mr. Eli Driver had an overcoat stolen at Grand Valley. A great many people complain that they have had articles stolen at the Valley, and the people up there should get a policeman. This would have a good effect.

DEBATING SOCIETY.—We hear that an attempt is going to be made to organize a debating society and a meeting is called for Saturday next. We hope the society will pan out all right, for we have a great many young orators in our midst and all they want is practice. We propose that Mr. Eli Driver take the position of professor and deliver his nomination day speech before the society.

WILL NOT RUN.—Election talk has not commenced to boom around here yet, but a few days more and it will be all the go. We are told that Mr. W. B. Jelly, the old municipal warrior, will not be a candidate for the reeve ship this year, and we don't think Mr. Geo. Bennett will offer himself for the position either. Eli Driver is on the run for the council and as people expect he will get there with both feet. Eli is a hustler and he should hustle his great speech to THE SUN office to be printed in the paper.

SPICY SAYINGS.

Marrying for money is a very common way of shaking hands with the devil.

The man who has no God owns nothing.

The man who does his best, does as well as an angel can do.

One of the biggest cowards is the man who is afraid to do right.

It isn't half as hard to please God as it is to please some of our neighbors.

A cheerful disposition will do more for you than a pedigree-running back to the Mayflower.

The criminal can hide from the officer who is on his track, but no sinner can hide from God.

The bad man throws mud at the good man because he has to do it to keep from looking at himself.

If happiness were the only good it would be hard work to find anybody to turn the grindstone.

Through all his trials and struggles, St. Paul carried a smile that he took with him to Heaven.

The world needs people who have the courage to do right, a great deal more than it does soldiers.

When you want to get help from God reach up. When you too help somebody else, reach up.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Enfeebled Existence.—This medicine embraces every attribute required in a general and domestic remedy. It overturns the foundations of disease laid by defective food and impure air. In obstructions or congestions of the liver, lungs, bowels, or and other organs, these Pills are especially serviceable and eminently successful. They should be kept in readiness in every family, being a medicine of incomparable utility for young persons, especially those of feeble constitutions. They never cause pain or irritate the most sensitive nerves or most tender bowels. Holloway's Pills are the best known purifiers of the blood, the most active promoters of absorption and secretion, whereby all poisonous and obnoxious particles are removed from both solids and fluids.

HINTS FOR YOUNG HOUSEWIVES.

Glycerine does not agree with a dry skin.

If you use powder always wash it off before going to bed.

When you give your cellar its spring cleaning add a little copperas water and salt to the whitewash.

A little ammonia and borax in the water when washing blankets keeps them soft and prevents shrinkage.

Sprinkling salt on the top and at the bottom of garden walls is said to keep snails from climbing up or down.

For relief from heartburn or dyspepsia drink a little cold water in which has been dissolved a teaspoonful of salt.

For hoarseness beat a fresh egg and thicken it with fine white sugar. Eat of it freely, and the hoarseness will soon be relieved.

If quilts are folded or rolled tightly after washing, then beaten with a rolling pin or potato masher, it lightens up the cotton and makes them look soft and new.

Chemists say that it takes more than twice as much sugar to sweeten preserves, sauce, etc., if put in when they begin to cook as it does to sweeten after the fruit is cooked.

Tar may be removed from the hands by rubbing with the outside of fresh orange or lemon peel and drying immediately. The volatile oils dissolve the tar so that it can be rubbed off.

Moths or any summer flying insects may be enticed to destruction by a bright tin pan half filled with kerosene set in the dark corner of the room. Attracted by the bright pan, the moth will meet his death in the kerosene.

The Best Yet.

Dear Sirs,—My mother was attacked with inflammation of the lungs which left her very weak and never free from cold, till at last she got a very severe cold and cough. She resolved to try Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, and, on sending, found it did her more good than any other medicine she ever tried.

A fiendish trick was performed one night last week on a person who had by persistent and well directed horse trading secured a horse for which he indignantly refused to accept half a ton of hay and "the drinks." The fact is enough to prove that the equine was of high quality for a trader as hay is worth seven dollars a ton. The horse received every attention from his proud owner. Imagine his grief and indignation upon going to the stable one morning to find the family saw horse battered to the manger of his Sunship. Some miscreants had during the night removed the animal and fed it rapidly to a hotel stable two hundred yards away, where the horse arrived in an exhausted condition. The owner subsequently recovered his property but so depreciated in value that he traded it off for a dollar and another horse which he afterwards shot.—Arthur Enterprise.

A Good Verdict.

Sirs,—I have great reason to speak well of your B. B. Bitters. I have taken 6 bottles for myself and family and find that for loss of appetite and weakness it has no equal. It cures sick headache, purifies the blood and will not fail when used. I heartily recommend it to all wanting a pure medicine.

MRS. HUGH MCNEYE, Truro, N. S.

That most popular national hero of Scotland, Sir William Wallace, was, after his arrest, it may be remembered, taken to the metropolis, and executed under circumstances of unusual cruelty. A Bridge of Allan doctor has just come into possession of the iron fetters which Wallace wore while being conveyed to London. Attached to the irons is the following account of their history:—"Part of the fetters in which Sir William Wallace was sent to London, 9th July, 1305. Sent as an insult by Edward to Sir William's aunt, Miss Jane Wallace, who lived at Bendy and, dying, caused it to be buried on a hilltop there, when it was dug up 9th July, 1835, exactly 530 years after.

The Reason Why.

THE reason why Burdock Blood Bitters leads all other medicines in the race for popularity is because it is absolutely pure, cannot harm the most delicate invalid, and never fails to cure biliousness, dyspepsia, bad blood, constipation, etc.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

The late Minister of Public Works, Sir Hector Langevin, has applied to the sergeant-at-arms of the House of Commons for the seat on the front Opposition row, hitherto occupied by Mr. Guimet.

There is a counterfeit $1 Dominion Bank note in circulation. The official description of the note says:—"The paper is poor and the printing inferior, while the portrait of Lady Dufferin in the centre is wretchedly executed. The scroll work, too, is bad; and the space left for the signature of Deputy Minister of Finance is blank."

The harsh, drastic purgatives, once deemed so indispensible, have given place to milder and more skilfully prepared laxatives; hence the great and growing demand for Ayer's Pills. Physicians everywhere recommend them for costiveness, indigestion, and liver complaints.

Mr. John Cook of East Garafraxa has bought from the Messrs W. and G. Burr, their farm of 100 acres on the 8th con. The price paid was $6,000, and Mr. Cook may consider himself fortunate in getting it so cheap, as only a few years ago the farm was sold to the Messrs Burr for $5,450. The land is of good quality, and there is a frame barn and a first class log house on the premises, which adjoin Mr. Cook's other farm.

Cold Weather Trials.

DEAR SIRS,—This fall and winter I suffered from neuralgia in my face and had the best medical advice without avail, I at last thought of trying B. B. B., and after using one bottle have not felt any symptoms of neuralgia since I regard it as a fine family medicine.

J. T. DROST, Rosalip, Man.

Mr. Parnell was a handsome man, with a fine figure, which he seemed to take pains to conceal in ill-fitting clothes. Occasionally he appeared in a coat that showed the marks of the tailor's skill, but as a rule he was poorly and even shabbily dressed. While the Royal Commission was sitting he went about arrayed to an old white coat, with a kerchief half covering his face, a slouch hat on his head, and a black bag in his hand.

Successful remedies always find unscrupulous imitators. Ask your dealer for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and take no substitute. They are a never failing blood builder and nerve tonic.

There is some rumor that the Government were considering the advisability of taking steps to extradite Owen E. Murphy and Robert H. McGreevy, who are in the United States. It is a question in the opinion of leading officials of the Department of Justice whether their offences would come within the extradition treaty, broad as it is, and also a question whether the plea of their being wanted for political reasons might not be successfully raised in their behalf.

Now Free from Pain.

DEAR SIRS,—I have been troubled with Lame Back for about 6 months, and thought I would try Hagyard's Yellow Oil, which cured me. Am now free from all pains, and recommend Yellow Oil very highly.

On Saturday last a man giving the name of McDonald, was found in a most deplorable state, in the hay mow of Mr W Thompson, on the gravel road, a few miles west of town. About six weeks ago, McDonald, who is a cripple, went into the barn to rest, and for several days was able to crawl out to the pump for a drink, but at last became so weak that he was unable to move. From that time until Saturday he was slowly dying of hunger. Thompson lives on another farm some distance away, but had occasion to visit the vacant farm to make arrangements for wintering his cattle, when he found McDonald, who was nothing more than skeleton of his former self. He was a man of about 180 lbs weight when he entered the barn, but when found did not weigh over 80 or 90 lbs, and being so emaciated and weak, could give but meagre accounts of himself. He is now receiving good attention and may get around all right in time.—Tilsonburg Liberal.

Dear Sir,—You Dr Morse's Indian Root Pills are the best selling pills in the market. This is a fact. I speak with knowledge on the subject as I have been dealing in various kinds of Pills, and sell more of Morse's than any other.

If any one does not believe this, I ask him to write any of my customers about it, or better still I ask him to try a box and see if he will then use any other. I hope I may always have them. Yours respectfully,

Chief Randall, the Guelph truant officer, had his first case before the police magistrate on Tuesday of last week. The defendant was a young lad named Geo. Thomas Hudson. He was found guilty and was sentenced to 12 months in the reformatory at Penetanguishene. This case should prove a warning to boys who are in the habit of playing truant. The truant officer is determined to carry out this law.

AND most powerful alterative is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young and old are alike benefited by its use. For the eruptive diseases peculiar to children nothing else is so effective as this medicine, while its agreeable flavor makes it easy to administer.

"My little boy had large scrofulous ulcers on his neck and throat from which he suffered terribly. Two physicians attended him, but he grew continually worse under their care, and everybody expected he would die. I had heard of the remarkable cures effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and decided to have my boy try it. Shortly after he began to take this medicine, the ulcers commenced healing, and, after using several bottles, he was entirely cured. He is now as healthy and strong as any boy of his age."—William F. Dougherty, Hampton, Va.

"In May last, my youngest child, fourteen months old, began to have sores gather on its head and body. We applied various simple remedies without avail. The sores increased in number and discharged copiously. A physician was called, but the sores continued to multiply until in a few months they nearly covered the child's head and body. At last we began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In a few days a marked change for the better was manifest. The sores assumed a more healthy condition, the discharge were gradually diminished, and finally ceased altogether. The child is livelier, its skin is fresher, and its appetite better than we have observed for months."—Frank M. Griffin, Long Point, Texas.

"The formula of Ayer's Sarsaparilla presents, for chronic diseases of almost every kind, the best remedy known to the medical world."—D. M. Wilson, M. D., Wiggs, Arkansas.

THE BEST FAMILY PILL IN USE

Keep the Works in good order.

NORMAN, Ont., January 13, 1890.

W. H. COMSTOCK, Brockville, Ont.

DEAR SIR,—Your "Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills" are the best regulator for the system that humanity can use. Life is as the time-piece: frail and delicate are many of its works. A tiny particle of foreign substance adheres to the smallest wheel in the works, and what is the result?—at first, only a slight difference is perceptible in its time-keeping, but wait awhile, the obstruction grows, the irregularity becomes greater, until at last, what could have been easily, with little trouble, in the beginning, will now require much care in thoroughly cleansing the entire works. So it is in human life—a slight derangement is neglected, it grows and increases, imperceptibly at first, then rapidly, until what could, in the beginning, have been cured with little trouble, becomes almost fatal. To prevent this, I advise all to purify the system frequently, by the use of Morse's Pills, and so preserve vigor and vitality.

Yours faithfully,
H. F. ATWELL.

The Restof Rock Salt, for Stock.

Read what Prof Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says regarding proper ways of salting stock:—"Dairy cattle should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has convinced me that when cows are denied salt for a period of even one week they will yield from 1½ to 1¾ per cent less milk, and that of an inferior quality. Such milk will, on average, turn sour in twenty four hours less time than milk drawn from the same or similar cows receiving salt every day, all other conditions of treatment being equal."

THE only chemically pure Salt ever discovered, analysed 99 84-100 Pure Salt. All kinds of stock will do better where this Salt is used; one ton will go four times as far as common salt, hence it is cheaper. It is the finest Salt in the world for the preservation of all kinds of meat, all the large packers are using it. It is sold cheaper than any other lump salt. We guarantee this Salt as advertised. HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Enfeebled Existence.—This medicine embraces every attribute required in a general and domestic remedy. It overturns the foundations of disease laid by defective food and impure air. In obstructions or congestions of the liver, lungs, bowels, or and other organs, these Pills are especially serviceable and eminently successful. They should be kept in readiness in every family, being a medicine of incompassable utility for young persons, especially those of feeble constitutions They never cause pain or irritate the most sensitive nerves or most tender bowels. Holloway's Pills are the best known purifiers of the blood, the most active promoters of absorption and secretion, whereby all poisonous and obnoxious particles are removed from both solids and fluids.

HINTS FOR YOUNG HOUSEWIVES.

Glycerine does not agree with a dry skin.

If you use powder always wash it off before going to bed.

When you give your cellar its spring cleaning add a little copperas water and salt to the whitewash.

A little ammonia and borax in the water when washing blankets keeps them soft and prevents shrinkage.

Sprinkling salt on the top and at the bottom of garden walls is said to keep snails from climbing up or down.

For relief from heartburn or dyspepsia drink a little cold water in which has been dissolved a teaspoonful of salt.

For hoarseness beat a fresh egg and thicken it with fine white sugar. Eat of it freely, and the hoarseness will soon be relieved.

If quilts are folded or rolled tightly after washing, then beaten with a rolling pin or potato masher, it lightens up the cotton and makes them look soft and new.

Chemists say that it takes more than twice as much sugar to sweeten pie berries, sauce, etc., if put in when they begin to cook as it does to sweeten after the fruit is cooked.

Tar may be removed from the hands by rubbing with the outside of fresh orange or lemon peel and drying immediately The volatile oils dissolve the tar so that it can be rubbed off

Moths or any summer flying insects may be enticed to destruction by a bright tin pan half filled with kerosene set in the dark corner of the room Attracted by the bright pan, the moth will meet his death in the kerosene.

The Best Art.

Dear Sirs,—My mother was attacked with inflammation of the lungs which left her very weak and never free from cold, till at last she got a very severe cold and cough She received from Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, and, on so doing, found it did her more good than any other medicine she ever tried

A Scotch trick was performed one night last week on a person who had by persistent and well directed course treating secured a horse for which he indignantly refused to accept half a ton of hay and "the drinks." The fact is enough to prove that the equine was of high quality for a trader—as hay is worth seven dollars a ton. The horse received every attention from his proud owner. Imagine his grief and indignation upon going to the stable one morning to find the famous saw horse he tried to the master of his! Same Sir Some miscreants had during the night removed the animal and led it rapidly to a hotel stable two hundred yards away, where the horse arrived in an exhausted condition The owner subsequently recovered his property but so depreciated in value that he traded it off for a dollar and another horse which he afterwards shot—Arthur Enterprise

A Good Verdict.

Sirs,—I have great reason to speak well of your B. B. Bitters I have taken 6 bottles for myself and family and find that for loss of appetite and weakness it has no equal It cures sick headache, purifies the blood and will not fail when used I heartily recommend it to all wanting a pure medicine.

MRS HUGH MCNEYE, Truro, N. S.

That most popular national hero of Scotland, Sir William Wallace, was, after his arrest, it may be remembered, taken to the metropolis, and executed under circumstances of unusual cruelty A Bridge of Allan doctor has just come into possession of the iron fetters which Wallace wore while being conveyed to London Attached to the irons is the following account of their history:—"Part of the fetters in which Sir William Wallace was sent to London, 9th July, 1305 Sent as an insult by Edward to Sir William's aunt, Miss Jane Wallace, who lived at Benaly and, dying, caused it to be buried on a hilltop there, when it was dug up 9th July, 1835 exactly 530 years after.

The Reason Why.

THE reason why Burdock Blood Bitters leads all other medicines in the race for popularity is because it is absolutely pure, cannot harm the most delicate invalid, and never fails to cure biliousness, dyspepsia, bad blood, constipation, etc.

Ayer's Pills Physicians everywhere recommend them for costiveness, indigestion, and liver complaints.

Mr. John Cook of East Gwillimbury has bought from the Messrs W. and G. Burr, their farm of 100 acres on the 8th con. The price paid was $4,000, and Mr. Cook may consider himself fortunate in getting it so cheap, as only a few years ago the farm was sold to the Messrs Burr for $5,450. The land is of good quality, and there is a frame barn and a first class log house on the premises, which adjoin Mr. Cook's other farm.

Cold Weather Trials.

DEAR SIRS,—This fall and winter I suffered from neuralgia in my face and had the best medical advice without avail, I at last thought of trying B. B. B., and after using one bottle have not felt any symptoms of neuralgia since I regard it as a fine family medicine.

J. T. DRONY, Hesslip, Man.

Mr. Parnell was a handsome man, with a fine figure, which he seemed to take pains to conceal in ill-fitting clothes. Occasionally he appeared in a coat that showed the marks of the tailor's skill, but as a rule he was poorly and even shabbily dressed. While the Royal Commission was sitting he went about arrayed in an old white coat, with a kerchief half covering his face, a slouch hat on his head, and a black bag in his hand.

Successful remedies always find unscrupulous imitators. Ask your dealer for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and take no substitute They are a never failing blood builder and nerve tonic.

There is some rumor that the Government were considering the advisability of taking steps to extradite Owen E. Murphy and Robert H. McGreevy, who are in the United States. It is a question in the opinion of leading officials of the Department of Justice whether their offences would come within the extradition treaty, broad as it is, and also a question whether the plea of their being wanted for political reasons might not be successfully raised in their behalf.

Now Free from Pain.

DEAR SIRS,—I have been troubled with Lame Back for about 6 months, and thought I would try Hagyard's Yellow Oil, which cured me Am now free from all pains, and recommend Yellow Oil very highly.

FRANK PALMER, Winona, Ont.

On Saturday last a man giving the name of McDonald, was found in a most deplorable state, in the hay mow of Mr W Thompson, on the gravel road, a few miles west of town. About six weeks ago, McDonald, who is a cripple, went into the barn to rest, and for several days was able to crawl out to the pump for a drink, but at last became so weak that he was unable to move. From that time until Saturday he was slowly dying of hunger. Thompson lives on another farm some distance away, but had occasion to visit the vacant farm to make arrangements for wintering his cattle, when he found McDonald, who was nothing more than skeleton of his former self He was a man of about 180 lbs weight when he entered the barn, but when found did not weigh over 80 or 90 lbs, and being so emaciated and weak, could give but meagre accounts of himself. He is now receiving good attention and may get around all right in time.—Tilsonburg Liberal

Dyspepsia, and decided to have my boy try it. Shortly after he began to take this medicine, the sloughing commenced healing, and, after using several bottles, he was entirely cured. He is now as healthy and strong as any boy of his age."—William F. Dougherty, Hampton, Va.

"In May last, my youngest child, fourteen months old, began to have sores gather on its head and body. We applied various simple remedies without avail. The sores increased in number and discharged copiously. A physician was called, but the sores continued to multiply until in a few months they nearly covered the child's head and body. At last we began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In a few days a marked change for the better was manifest. The sores assumed a more healthy condition, the discharges were gradually diminished, and finally ceased altogether. The child is livelier, its skin is fresher, and its appetite better than we have observed for months."—Frank M. Griffin, Long Point, Texas.

THE BEST FAMILY PILL IN USE

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS

Keep the Works in good order.

NORMAN, ONT., January 15, 1890.

W. H. COMSTOCK, Brockville, Ont.

DEAR SIR,—Your "Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills" are the best regulator for the system that humanity can use. Life is as the time-piece: frail and delicate are many of its works. A tiny particle of foreign substances disturbs the smallest wheel in the works and what is the result?—at first, only a slight difference is perceptible in its time-keeping, but wait and the observation grows, the irregularity becomes greater, until at last, what could have been mended with little trouble, in the beginning, will now require much care to thoroughly cleansing the entire works. So it is in human life—a slight derangement is neglected, it grows and increases, imperceptibly at first, then rapidly, until what could, in the beginning, have been cured with little trouble, becomes almost fatal. To prevent this, I advise all to purify the system frequently, by the use of Morse's Pills, and so preserve vigor and vitality.

Yours faithfully,
H. F. ATWELL.

DEAR SIR,—For many years, I have been a firm believer in your "Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills." Not with a blind faith, but a faith based on the confidence wrought by an actual personal experience of their value and merit. My business is such that I spend much of my time away from home, and I would not consider my travelling outfit complete without a box of Morse's Pills.

The Rest of Rock Salt, for Stock.

Read what Prof Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says regarding proper ways of salting stock:—"Dairy cattle should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has convinced me that when cows are denied salt for a period of seven one week they will yield from 10½ to 17½ per cent less milk; and that of an inferior quality. Such milk will, on an average, turn sour in twenty four hours less time than milk drawn from the same or similar cows receiving salt every day, all other conditions of treatment being equal."

THE only chemically pure Salt ever discovered, analysed 99 84-100 Pure Salt All kinds of stock will do better where this Salt is used; one ton will go four times as far as common salt, hence it is cheaper. WHEN they find how rapidly health is restored by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The reason is that this preparation contains only the purest and most powerful alteratives and tonics. To thousands yearly it proves a veritable elixir of life.

Mrs. Jos. Lake, Brookway Centre, Mich., writes: "Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony. I was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could eat an in my condition, my appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life, and I cannot thank you too much."

"We, the undersigned, citizens of Brookway Centre, Mich., hereby certify that the above statement, made by Mrs. Lake, is true in every particular and entitled to full credence."—O. P. Chamberlain, G. W. Waring, C. A. Wells, Druggists.

"My brother, in England, was, for a long time, unable to attend to his occupation, by reason of sores on his feet. I sent him Ayer's Almanac and the testimonials it contained induced him to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using it a little while, he was cured, and is now a well man, working in a sugar mill at Brisbane, Queensland, Australia."—A. Attswell, Sharbot Lake, Ontario.

LOST FRIENDS.

I had two friends. In years now long since flown
We played together on my father's farm.
Ah, happy days of childhood when unknown
All thought of sorrow, all idea of harm.

Jack was the eldest, and in all our plays
He led with mien authoritative skill;
His were the winsome and attractive ways,
And his the strong and all-controlling will.

Fred was a merry, happy natured lad,
And with his very presence seemed to come
An atmosphere of joy that made us glad
And helped to beautify our simple home.

Through all our plays, through all our talks there ran
The promise that when we three should be men,
When life and earnest things for us began,
We should be friends at least as great as then.

The years have flown; there is not much to tell,
Dear Fred, the lad of whom we were so fond,
In early manhood bade us all farewell,
And slipped away into the vast beyond.

And Jack? What good to tell of trust misplaced,
Of thought of self that did a friend an ill,
Of lack of sympathy, of lowered taste,
That left a void I could not hope to fill;

Of vicious doubts that severed heart from heart,
Of tiny rift that widened, till, at last,
All thought of friendship has become a part
Of a remembered and regretted past.

So friends are lost or severed from our side,
Although best earthly gifts that God has given!
But now I feel it was not Fred who died:
Jack died; Fred lives and waits for me in Heaven!

OLIVE VARCOE

—OR—

TRUE TO THE LAST.

CHAPTER XXIV. (Continued)

"Oh, indeed!" said Mrs. Gunning, with grim earnestness, as her thoughts travelled swiftly to the dingy garret, where the worn and weary Olive lay pale and wasted on her poor bed. "When Tobias does things without consulting me, he generally makes a fool of himself. And is that your brother's advertisement about 'O. V.'?"

"Yes. And I cannot tell how it will all end," replied Florian, wearily, leaning her head upon her hands.

"As far as Tobias is concerned," said Mrs. Gunning, "it will end very soon, my dear, as I shall not permit your brother to make a cat's-paw of a man of his intelligence. And I would advise you, Florian, to act in the same prompt way, and clear yourself from any share in the business as fast as you can. That man ought never to have seen you, never have spoken to you. In all you have told me, I perceive no reason for your imprudence in meeting him."

"You are very bitter against him," said Florian, proudly. "If there be any fault in that, it is mine, not his. I confess that I wished to see him—I confess that I was curious. I had heard so much of him from Opal, that my heart was touched, my imagination warmed, by the history of his strange devotion—a devotion, too, so unreturned, so unregarded by its object."

Mrs. Gunning listened to Florian with eyes wide open with amazement.

"I never thought to hear you confess to a morbid curiosity, Florian," she said. "I believed your nature a high and noble one."

Florian was silent, but she did not look abashed or ashamed.

"And did this man—I cannot speak his name," said Mrs. Gunning—"only come to Paris to search for Olive."

"For that chiefly," replied Florian, hesitating slightly. "At all events, to find her and do her justice, is his first, his most earnest desire."

"And if he finds her," said Mrs Gunning, "what will he do then?"

"He will go back to Cornwall instantly," replied Florian—"I believe to Trewavas."

"I am sorry for Sir Hilton," said Mrs. Gunning abruptly; "and yet his pride well deserves the bitter punishment awaiting it. What will he say, what will he think, when he finds what Olive has suffered for his sake?"

"I wonder she can love him," said Florian, softly. "Nothing amazes me as does this strange, hopeless devotion of hers, for that self-contained man."

"You wonder at it!" exclaimed Mrs. Gunning, turning on her fiercely; "and yet you have just dared to confess to me a love a thousand times madder—a love that is a disgrace to you—a love that you should shudder to own!"

"Mrs. Gunning," cried Florian, rising, with flashing eyes, and her cheeks scarlet with indignation, "how dare you speak to me like this? I have borne too much from you. I have stood meekly silent, and permitted you to malign a man, before whom Sir Hilton Trewavas should stand bareheaded and ashamed—a man whose courage, whose generosity I revere. I was silent because I was ashamed that I had given him my love unasked—given it hopelessly, passionately, knowing that his heart is fixed on one more worthy than I; but I will be ashamed no more. No, I am proud I love him; and for his sake I will stay single all my life long."

Florian had spoken with wonderful volubility and passion, but her strength gave away now, and she fell back in her chair trembling and weeping.

Mrs. Gunning thrust both her little hands into her frizzled hair, and stared at her helplessly for a moment, in utter stupidity; then she shook herself, by way of bringing back her senses, and walked straight up to Florian's chair.

"My dear girl," said she, "I beg your pardon; I am a simpleton. I have been making the greatest mistake I ever made in my life. I thought——"

And here she stopped and whispered in Florian's ear. The girl started back in horror at the name uttered, and her face grew very pale.

"Mrs. Gunning, how could you think anything so horrible?" she said, with a visible shudder. "Don't you know that it is to find him—to track him down—that——"

"That your friend is come to Paris, my dear," said Mrs. Gunning. "Well, I guess as much."

"And he knows now where that unhappy man is," continued Florian, in a whisper; "but he will not leave Paris until he has found Olive."

"Then, my dear," said Mrs. Gunning, "let him leave to-night; for when you see him this evening, you may tell him Olive is found."

She stooped and kissed the girl's tear-stained face, and then kneeling by her chair, she told in rapid words the story of Olive's sickness, loneliness, poverty and pain.

CHAPTER XXV.

That same afternoon Mrs. Gunning was destined to receive another trial to her nerves, and this in the shape of a pompous silence on the part of her lord and master, sorely distressing to her kindly nature. They drove home together in a hired carriage, and during the drive the majestic Tobias was as mysterious and silent as a pyramid. In vain his wife plied him with questions as to his health and spirits, or with genial remarks upon the weather, or the approaching London season. He cared nothing for any of it; he was impervious to flattery, and presented a face silent and stolid as a wall to all her adroit attacks. On his arrival at home he intrenched himself in his dressing-room, saying he had letters of importance to write, and he did not wish to be disturbed till dinner was on the table. There was nothing for it but to obey this command, and await hopefully an after-dinner thaw. That meal, however, passed like an Egyptian feast, with several skeletons served up as a reminder instead of only one, and the very servants seemed to stalk about like mutes.

"This comes of having secrets from each other," thought the contrite Mrs. Gunning, as she glanced at the suggestively silent countenance of her husband.

"My love," said she, "these oranges are very good. May I peel you one?"

"You may," said Mr. Tobias.

And there was an end; it was im possible to get conversation out of an orange; and, in the servants' presence, poor little Mrs. Gunning dared to try no stronger method of forcing speech from her domestic oracle. No sooner, however, were they alone, than she burst forth in an injured tone.

"Tobias," said she, "what is the matter with you? If I have offended you speak out, and say so. I hate sulkiness.

"Mrs. Gunning, I am not offended," he replied, "and I am not sulky. I have simply a reason for being silent, that's all."

Good gracious! was there ever any thing so trying? Here was Mrs. Gunning herself bursting with secrets, and yet willing to be as chirpy and chatty as ever, while Tobias made himself as pompous, as arrogant, and as silent as the tombs of the Pharaohs.

"Mrs. Gunning," said Mr. Tobias, looking at her through his eye glass, "will that dress you have on do for the opera?"

"Goodness me! no, of course not," she replied.

"Then oblige me by changing it, as I have promised Herbert Langley to meet him at the opera to-night, in Mrs. Langley's box."

"Is Florina going?" asked Mrs Gunning, carelessly.

"No, she is engaged to go to some friends this evening," was the curt reply.

Mrs. Gunning sighed deeply, and looked wistfully at her husband.

"Tobias," she said, "you recollect that advertisement about Bolster? Did you ever make any enquiries about it?"

Apparently she had touched upon a subject that startled Mr. Gunning, for he immediately shut himself, metaphorically, into a silent tomb.

"I decline to be questioned," said he. "I have ordered a carriage at eight; will you get ready, please?"

"Now couldn't I annihilate him with a word if I chose!" thought the exasperated little wife, as she rose with great meaning mouthing to obey Mr. behest.

During the drive to the opera, Tobias was more aggravating still. Full of importance, and mystery, and triumph, he enjoyed himself immensely, while Mrs. Gunning shrank into the utmost insignificance, not to say cowardice.

"What can it be?" she thought to herself with terror. "What is it, he and Herbert Langley have found out?"

She was not destined to remain much longer in uncertainty. Hurrying her through the corridors to the box Mr. Gunning made here a tremendous speech.

"Mrs. Gunning," said the ungrateful man, "women are so long-tongued and mischievous, that I confess that I have brought you here to-night to prevent your being a marplot. You will be under my own eye here till twelve o'clock; you will be able to send a message to no one, write to no one; after that hour it will be too late, even if I did not take care—as I shall—that you seize no pen and paper to-night."

"What does this mean," exclaimed the little woman, very much excited.

"It means," returned the triumphant Tobias, "that I have very much suspected lately your visits to that villainous laundress. And to-morrow morning, Herbert Langley and I pay a visit to your little friend, Mademoiselle Olympe Valoey, and hand her over to the police."

There was a clash of trumpets, a roll of drums, and Mrs. Gunning, pale as death, took her seat amid a rustle of silks and satins, to listen with what courage she could to music, which sounded in her ears like the braying of a thousand donkeys, each one with a head like her own Tobias. Nevertheless in about half an hour the little woman recovered her serenity, and looked out upon the play with a smiling countenance.

"Now I've got it!" she said suddenly as her hand came down sharply on the silken and cushioned railing of the box.

"Got what?" asked Mr. Gunning, in a stately tone.

"This horrid fly, Tobias, that has been buzzing about my ears all the evening," replied Mrs. Gunning.

It was a quarter past twelve that night when Herbert Langley ran lightly up the stairs to his mother's apartment on the first floor, whistling as he went. In the drawing-room, seated by a fast-dying fire, he found his sister alone.

"Mrs. Gunning gave me something for you, Flo," he said.

"A note!" said Florian, eagerly.

"A note!" he repeated. "How could she write a note at the opera? It is your locket, which she has got mended for you."

"My locket!" said Florian. "She hasn't any locket of mine."

"Yes, she had," persisted Herbert; "she said she thought you had forgotten it. She took it off her chain, and here it is."

Florian, with a flush of expectation on her face, thought it wise to be silent as Mrs. Gunning's unconscious messenger took the locket from his waistcoat pocket and handed it to his sister.

"I shall have good news for you to-morrow, Flo, I think," said the young man lighting his cigar at the dying embers. "And now good night. I shall smoke this out in my own room."

"Wait a minute, Herbert; I have got good news for you," said Florian.

"I have had a letter from Opal Vansittart."

As Florian spoke, a deep crimson flush crept over her face, even to the roots of her hair.

"The deuce you have! That is good news," cried her brother. "And why the—the dickens didn't the girl write before?"

"She has been very ill," replied Florian. "She has not seen the advertisements, nor had my letters. She has had fever. She is so sorry, she says, for all the trouble she has given us."

"And why in the world did she run away from Langley?" said Herbert.

"That—that was the beginning of the fever," replied Florian.

"Ah, poor thing! out in her head, I suppose," said Herbert. "Well, Flo, we must have her here, and show the world, Mr. Vivian Damerel included, that she is herself, and nobody else."

"I shall be delighted to have her here," said Florian, faintly, "but I have sounded mamma, and I see she will never consent."

"Ah! that's a difficulty, Flo," said Herbert, with a puzzled air. "Well, I'll think it over and let you know more about it to-morrow. Tell-some one to call me at seven, will you, Flo? I have an appointment in the morning at the unnatural hour of eight."

With a happy "good night," for he seemed in triumphant spirits, Herbert Langley mustered from the room and left his sister alone. Then she took Mrs. Gunning's locket to the light, and turned it over and over anxiously, and lastly opened it. As she did this there escaped from its golden prison a poor little half dead fly; and on the inner surface of the gold, scratched by a pin, was the word "instantly."

With burning cheeks and trembling hand, Florian stood a moment in wonder and dismay. But she was not long in deciphering this strange message; she never for an instant considered it other than earnest and urgent. Mrs. Gunning was too sensible to send her such a token as this, unless the danger was imminent and near.

"Fly instantly," this was her message, and she meant it. Florian could easily divine that it was sent in this odd manner, because she most evidently have been under some strong surveillance, and utterly unable to find other means of communicating her warning. Recalling the great Tobias's pompous importance that afternoon, Florian felt sure that he and her brother had at last succeeded in their quest, and it was doubtless they who had mounted guard over Mrs. Gunning and hindered her from sending note or messenger. And even in her dismay, Florian could not but smile at the sharpness of the little woman, whose keen wits had found means to circumvent their watchfulness, and even make a catspaw of the unconscious Mr. Langley.

"And he said he had an appointment at eight," gasping about her half wildly. "What there is to do must be done at once, then—now, this very night! Oh, how can I go to him at this hour and alone?"

She sank into a chair, and for a moment seemed lost in bewildered thought. Then starting up, she clasped her hands, saying eagerly, "I will go! She shall not suffer any more if I can help it. I would save her, if only for his sake."

A few minutes after this, dressed in a dark cloak, and with a thick veil over her face, Florian crept quietly through the porter's lodge, and into the street, where, with trembling hand, she beckoned to a passing fiacre, and sprang into it. She gave her directions to the driver in a low voice, and then drew up the windows as he went off at a rattling pace.

Very pale, very wasted, but with a calmness and peace upon her face, which it wanted in that old fiery time, when the passion of her nature, unchastened by sorrow, was ever ready to spring to eye or lip, Olive sat by the fire alone. She sat with her small thin hands lying idly in her lap, and her dark eyes which often filled suddenly with tears, fixed sadly on the dying embers. Sometimes she looked wistfully at the little clock on the chimney-piece, the hands of which were just upon the strike of one. It seemed as though she were enduring the weakness, which rendered the exertion of undressing and going to rest, appear too great a trouble for her feebleness to attempt. And the clock struck one; and yet she lingered here, with her clasped hands still lying powerless, and large tears gathering slowly in her eyes, and falling down unchecked over her wasted cheeks. She was not sobbing or weeping passionately: the tears welled up quietly from their fount, and fell in silence, not even a sigh breaking their weary flow. She was very lonely, and the poor room in which she sat looked chill and cheerless by the dim light, its very shadows having a weird and ugly shape, strangely expressive of solitude and pain. Upon the little table near her rested the remains of her frugal supper; she had been too weak to put them away; and down upon her feet, in loose folds, lay the large grey shawl that had slipped from her shoulders. The dying fire needed replenishing, and the wood was close by, but her weary hands refused to unclasp their wan fingers at the mind's bidding.

Was she counting the cost of her strange deed as she sat thus alone in her sickness, untended and unwatched? As she looked back upon the path which she had trodden, so full of thorns and sorrows, did she shudder and weep for her own sufferings? Did she repent as she saw her own act had made her a wanderer, an outcast, nameless, forsaken, shunned, hunted, and driven from place to place, even as one who "seeketh rest, and findeth none?" No; her tears fell for none of these things: she counted her sufferings as nothing, if only they had not been endured in vain. In that fear her heart could yet bound in sudden anguish, and her pulse stand still. And here in this poor garret, between her tearful eyes and the dying fire, there rose up faint visions of Trewavas. Here a sunny slope, there a green glade, with shadows lying on the grass; again, a wooded dell, with glimpses of the sea; then the shining sands, the quiet ripple of the waves; and the tall beeches, with silken leaves of golden green—all rose up before her in this mist of tears, making her heart swell with love and bitterness.

And this dear Trewavas, it was smiling, it was happy; no blight had fallen on it, no shame, no pain. It still gathered beneath its ancient roof all it loved and honored of its own lineage—not one missing, not one an outcast save her, the poor outlandish cousin, the dependent whom the world ignored. Did it matter that she was suffering, if the name was saved?—the grand old Trewavas name. Did it matter where Olive Varcoe was, so that the family pride was unscathed, the family honor sustained? No, truly; it mattered nothing. And so, amid the rain of tears, the visions of Trewavas rose and fell; the Trewavas she had saved, the Trewavas between whom and the world's contumely she had thrust her own and.

"And I do repent," she said, in a soft, thrilling voice, as she cast her tearful eyes upward. "I owed him this. And surely, for this, God will forgive me my ingratitude, my impatience, my willful burst of passion, and my selfish love. Ah! not selfish now. Even for my love's sake I can give him up, and bear to see him happy with another. There is a barrier between us now, that time can never fling down. If he came to me and offered me his love, the world would say it was the bribe for which I had suffered this, and some shadow of dishonor would fall upon him. And that shall never, never be!"

Her head fell forward on her hands, and between the thin fingers her tears now fell fast.

"I have saved his pride," she said; "he loved his pride better than anything else in the whole world. I have saved it for him; there is not a word against his name. Intact, untouched, unspotted, the name of Trewavas will be honored by the world while Olive Varcoe——"

But here she stopped. Her generous heart would not count up the ills it bore. She would not weigh in the balance against their honor her dishonor, her brand of shame and crime. Still less did one mean thought ever touch her soul of their wealth, their beautiful refinements of life, as contrasted with this sad poverty and lack of comfort. For how little could such needs count compared with those nobler, deeper sorrows, that she had borne so willingly! If health and strength had fallen before this grim misery, that was her body's weakness, not the mind's.

And how beautiful and glorious it was to think of dear old Trewavas, standing in its stately pride, still so honored and beloved of all! More beautiful still to feel that her feeble hands had kept sorrow from it, her unvalued love had saved it from a dreadful shame. She, the tiny creature, so mean, so small, so poor, so overlooked, had stood in the breach, and caught the arrows in her own heart, that would have pierced its pride. And there was no self praise in this thought, only a sore of humble joy that she had been permitted to do this that to her had been given the power to suffer in their stead.

Shut up as in a prison by her friendlessness, her sickness, her poverty, and her fear, the rumors of the outside world had not reached her, and she thought of Trewavas as peaceful, happy, safe. Above all, Sir Hilton was unscathed; no glimmer of the bitter truth had touched him, no finger pointed at him as he passed; his pride of birth and of name had suffered no shock; careless and happy, he was free to choose from the highest in the land another bride, as fair as poor Eleanor Maristowe. And if this thought caused a fear, Olive swept it away quickly. Lady Trewavas, too, would live out the remnant of her days in peace; unbowed by shame, and pain, her honored head would go down to its last sleep, still crowned with its ancient glory. Ah, what joy to purchase this peace for her, even at so great a cost! And Olive looked down upon her wasted hands and smiled.

"They thought I did not love them!" she said softly to herself. "My willful words, my fierce temper, missed them all. And is this too great a return for what they did for me? No! I was homeless, and they gave me a home; an orphan, and they gave me a mother and brothers. Ah, how ungrateful I was!—how passionate, how wicked, how angry for fancied slights! It was not till that sorrow came, that I knew how much greater than my anger or my jealousy was my deep, deep love. Oh Trewavas, dear old Trewavas, may God bless you, and give me strength to bear on to the end!"

Again her tears fell, and through their mist rose up the visions of turret and terrace, mullioned window and stately hall. She saw herself as on the first day she entered Trewavas, a forlorn untaught child, gazing in wonder on these new scenes. Here was the dell where she had first seen English wild flowers, and gathered them in her little eager hands; here the shingly beach, where she had waited and watched so many times for Hilton's boat. Alas! that with these scenes there rose unbidden the dreadful wood, the Lady's Bower, and the lonely pool!

Good Advice.

DEAR SIRS,—I have been troubled with headache for over 40 years, and had it so bad about once a week that I was sometimes not expected to live. I was advised to use B. B. B., and have used 3 bottles. I now have an attack only once in four or five months, and feel that if I continue using it I will be entirely cured. Therefore I recommend it highly.

OLIVE VARCOE

—OR—

TRUE TO THE LAST.

CHAPTER XXIV. (Continued.)

"Oh, indeed!" said Mrs. Gunning, with grim earnestness, as her thoughts travelled swiftly to the dingy garret, where the worn and weary Olive lay pale and wasted on her poor bed. "When Tobias does things without consulting me, he generally makes a fool of himself. And is that your brother's advertisement about 'O. V.'?"

"Yes. And I cannot tell how it will all end," replied Florian, wearily, leaning her head upon her hands.

"As far as Tobias is concerned," said Mrs. Gunning, "it will end very soon, my dear, as I shall not permit your brother to make a cat's-paw of a man of his intelligence. And I would advise you, Florian, to act in the same prompt way, and clear yourself from any share in the business as fast as you can. That man ought never to have seen you, never have spoken to you. In all you have told me, I perceive no reason for your imprudence in meeting him."

"You are very bitter against him," said Florian, proudly. "If there be any fault in that, it is mine, not his. I confess that I wished to see him—I confess that I was curious. I had heard so much of him from Opal, that my heart was touched, my imagination warmed, by the history of his strange devotion—a devotion, too, so unrestrained, so unregarded by its object."

Mrs. Gunning listened to Florian with eyes wide open with amazement.

"I never thought to hear you confess to a morbid curiosity, Florian," she said. "I believed your nature a high and noble one."

Florian was silent, but she did not look abashed or ashamed.

"And did this man—I cannot speak his name," said Mrs. Gunning—"only come to Paris to search for Olive."

"For that chiefly," replied Florian, hesitating slightly. "At all events, to find her and do her justice, is his first, his most earnest desire."

"And if he finds her," said Mrs Gunning, "what will he do then?"

"He will go back to Cornwall instantly," replied Florian—"I believe to Trewavas."

"I am sorry for Sir Hilton," said Mrs. Gunning sharply; "and yet his pride well deserves the bitter punishment awaiting it. What will he say, what will he think, when he finds what Olive has suffered for his sake?"

"I wonder she can love him," said Florian, softly. "Nothing amazes me as does this strange, hopeless devotion of hers, for that self-contained man."

"You wonder at it!" exclaimed Mrs. Gunning, turning on her fiercely; "and yet you have just dared to confess to me a love a thousand times madder—a love that is a disgrace to you—a love that you should shudder to own!"

"Mrs. Gunning," cried Florian, rising, with flashing eyes, and her cheeks scarlet with indignation, "how dare you speak to me like this? I have borne too much from you. I have stood meekly silent, and permitted you to malign a man, before whom Sir Hilton Trewavas should stand bareheaded and ashamed—a man whose courage, whose generosity I revere. I was silent because I was ashamed that I had given him my my dear," said Mrs. Gunning. "Well, I guess as much."

"And he knows now where that unhappy man is," continued Florian, in a whisper; "but he will not leave Paris until he has found Olive."

"Then, my dear," said Mrs. Gunning, "let him leave to-night; for when you see him this evening, you may tell him Olive is found."

She stooped and kissed the girl's tear-stained face, and then kneeling by her chair, she told in rapid words the story of Olive's sickness, loneliness, poverty and pain.

CHAPTER XXV.

That same afternoon Mrs. Gunning was destined to receive another trial to her nerves, and this in the shape of a pompous silence on the part of her lord and master, sorely distressing to her kindly nature. They drove home together in a hired carriage, and during the drive the majestic Tobias was as mysterious and silent as a pyramid. In vain his wife plied him with questions as to his health and spirits, or with genial remarks upon the weather, or the approaching London season. He cared nothing for any of it; he was impervious to flattery, and presented a face silent and stolid as a wall to all her adroit attacks. On his arrival at home he intrenched himself in his dressing-room, saying he had letters of importance to write, and he did not wish to be disturbed till dinner was on the table. There was nothing for it but to obey this command, and await hopefully an after-dinner thaw. That meal, however, passed like an Egyptian feast, with several skeletons served up as a reminder instead of only one, and the very servants seemed to stalk about like mutes.

"This comes of having secrets from each other," thought the contrite Mrs. Gunning, as she glanced at the suggestively silent countenance of her husband.

"My love," said she, "these oranges are very good. May I peel you one?"

"You may," said Mr. Tobias.

And there was an end; it was im possible to get conversation out of an orange; and, in the servants' presence, poor little Mrs. Gunning dared to try no stronger method of forcing speech from her domestic oracle. No sooner, however, were they alone, than she burst forth in an injured tone.

"Tobias," said she, "what is the matter with you? If I have offended you speak out, and say so. I hate sulkiness.

"Mrs. Gunning, I am not offended," he replied, "and I am not sulky. I have simply a reason for being silent, that's all."

Good gracious! was there ever anything so trying? Here was Mrs. Gunning herself bursting with secrets, and yet willing to be as chirpy and chatty as ever, while Tobias made himself as pompous, as arrogant, and as silent as the tombs of the Pharaohs.

"Mrs. Gunning," said Mr. Tobias, looking at her through his eye glass, "will that dress you have on do for the opera?"

"Goodness me! so, of course not," she replied.

"Then oblige me by changing it, as I have promised Herbert Langley to meet him at the opera to-night, in Mrs. Langley's box."

"Is Florian going?" asked Mrs Gunning, carelessly.

"No, she is engaged to go to some friends this evening," was the curt reply.

Mrs. Gunning sighed deeply, and looked wistfully at her husband.

"Tobias," she said, "you recollect that advertisement about Bolster? Did you ever make any enquiries about it?"

Apparently she had touched upon a subject that startled Mr. Gunning, for he immediately shut himself, metaphorically, into a silent tomb.

"I decline to be questioned," said he. "I have ordered a carriage at eight; will you get ready, please?"

"Now couldn't I annihilate him with a word if I chose!" thought the ex-[illegible] very much ruffled.

"It means," returned the triumphant Tobias, "that I have very much suspected lately your visits to that villainous laundress. And to-morrow morning, Herbert Langley and I pay a visit to your little friend, Mademoiselle Olympe Valocy, and hand her over to the police."

There was a clash of trumpets, a roll of drums, and Mrs. Gunning, pale as death, took her seat amid a rustle of silks and satins, to listen with what courage she could to music, which sounded in her ears like the braying of a thousand donkeys, each one with a head like her own Tobias. Nevertheless in about half an hour the little woman recovered her serenity, and looked out upon the play with a smiling countenance.

"Now I've got it!" she said suddenly as her hand came down sharply on the silken and cushioned railing of the box.

"Got what?" asked Mr. Gunning, in a stately tone.

"This horrid fly, Tobias, that has been buzzing about my ears all the evening," replied Mrs. Gunning.

It was a quarter past twelve that night when Herbert Langley ran lightly up the stairs to his mother's apartment on the first floor, whistling as he went. In the drawing-room, seated by a fast-dying fire, he found his sister alone.

"Mrs. Gunning gave me something for you, Flo," he said.

"A note!" said Florian, eagerly.

"A note!" he repeated. "How could she write a note at the opera? It is your locket, which she has got mended for you."

"My locket!" said Florian. "She hasn't any locket of mine."

"Yes, she had," persisted Herbert; "she said she thought you had forgotten it. She took it off her chain, and here it is."

Florian, with a flush of expectation on her face, thought it wise to be silent as Mrs. Gunning's unconscious messenger took the locket from his waistcoat pocket and handed it to his sister.

"I shall have good news for you tomorrow, Flo, I think," said the young man lighting his cigar at the dying embers. "And now good night. I shall smoke this out in my own room."

"Wait a minute, Herbert; I have got good news for you," said Florian.

"I have had a letter from Opal Vansittart."

As Florian spoke, a deep crimson flush crept over her face, even to the roots of her hair.

"The deuce you have! That is good news," cried her brother. "And why the—the dickens didn't the girl write before?"

"She has been very ill," replied Florian. "She has not seen the advertisements, nor had my letters. She has had fever. She is so sorry, she says, for all the trouble she has given us."

"And why in the world did she run away from Langley?" said Herbert.

"That—that was the beginning of the fever," replied Florian.

"Ah, poor thing! out in her head, I suppose," said Herbert. "Well, Flo, we must have her here, and show the world, Mr. Vivian Damerel included, that she is herself, and nobody else."

"I shall be delighted to have her here," said Florian, faintly, "but I have sounded mamma, and I see she will never consent."

"Ah! that's a difficulty, Flo," said Herbert, with a puzzled air. "Well, I'll think it over and let you know more about it to-morrow. Tell some one to call me at seven, will you, Flo? I have an appointment in the morning at the unnatural hour of eight."

With a happy "good night," for he seemed in triumphant spirits, Herbert Langley mustered from the room and left his sister alone. Then she took Mrs. Gunning's locket to the light, and turned it over and over anxiously, and lastly opened it. As she did this there escaped from its golden prison a poor little half dead fly; and on the inner surface of the gold, scratched by a pin, was the word "instantly."

With burning cheeks and trembling hand, Florian stood a moment in won-

"What there is to do must be done at once, then—now, this very night! Oh, how can I go to him at this hour and alone?"

She sank into a chair, and for a moment seemed lost in bewildered thought. Then starting up, she clasped her hands, saying eagerly, "I will go! She shall not suffer any more if I can help it. I would save her, if only for his sake."

A few minutes after this, dressed in a dark cloak, and with a thick veil over her face, Florian crept quietly through the porter's lodge, and into the street, where, with trembling hand, she beckoned to a passing fiacre, and sprang into it. She gave her directions to the driver in a low voice, and then drew up the windows as he went off at a rattling pace.

Very pale, very wasted, but with a calmness and peace upon her face, which it wanted in that old fiery time, when the passion of her nature, unchastened by sorrow, was ever ready to spring to eye or lip, Olive sat by the fire alone. She sat with her small thin hands lying idly in her lap, and her dark eyes which often filled suddenly with tears, fixed sadly on the dying embers. Sometimes she looked wistfully at the little clock on the chimney-piece, the hands of which were just upon the strike of one. It seemed as though she were chiding the weakness, which rendered the exertion of undressing and going to rest, appear too great a trouble for her feebleness to attempt. And the clock struck one; and yet she lingered here, with her clasped hands still lying powerless, and large tears gathering slowly in her eyes, and falling down unchecked over her wasted cheeks. She was not sobbing or weeping passionately: the tears welled up quietly from their fount, and fell in silence, not even a sigh breaking their weary flow. She was very lonely, and the poor room in which she sat looked chill and cheerless by the dim light, its very shadows having a weird and ugly shape, strangely expressive of solitude and pain. Upon the little table near her rested the remains of her frugal supper; she had been too weak to put them away; and down upon her feet, in loose folds, lay the large grey shawl that had slipped from her shoulders. The dying fire needed replenishing, and the wood was close by, but her weary hands refused to unclasp their wan fingers at the mind's bidding.

Was she counting the cost of her strange deed as she sat thus alone in her sickness, untended and unwatched? As she looked back upon the path which she had trodden, so full of thorns and sorrows, did she shudder and weep for her own sufferings? Did she repent as she saw her own act had made her a wanderer, an outcast, nameless, forsaken, shunned, hunted, and driven from place to place, even as one who "seeketh rest, and findeth none?" No; her tears fell for none of these things: she counted her sufferings as nothing, if only they had not been endured in vain. In that fear her heart could yet bound in sudden anguish, and her pulse stand still. And here in this poor garret, between her tearful eyes and the dying fire, there rose up faint visions of Trewavas. Here a sunny slope, there a green glade, with shadows lying on the grass; again, a wooded dell, with glimpses of the sea; then the shining sands, the quiet ripple of the waves; and the tall beeches, with silken leaves of golden green—all rose up before her in this mist of tears, making her heart swell with love and bitterness.

And this dear Trewavas, it was smiling, it was happy; no blight had fallen on it, no shame, no pain. It still gathered beneath its ancient roof all it loved and honored of its own lineage—not one missing, not one an outcast save her, the poor outlandish cousin, the degraded Gent whom the world ignored. Did it matter that she was suffering, if the name was saved?—the grand old Trewavas name. Did it matter where Olive Varcoe was, so that the family pride was unscathed, the family honor sustained? No, truly; it mattered nothing. And so, amid the rain of tears, the visions of Trewavas rose and fell; the Trewavas she had saved, the Trewavas between whom and the world's contumely she had thrust her own soul.

"What there is to do must be done at once, then—now, this very night! Oh, how can I go to him at this hour and alone?"

have spoken against their honor but dishonor, her brand of shame and crime. Still less did one mean thought ever touch her soul of their wealth, their beautiful refinements of life, as contrasted with this sad poverty and lack of comfort. For how little could such needs count compared with those nobler, deeper sorrows, that she had borne so willingly! If health and strength had fallen before this grim misery, that was her body's weakness, not she mind's.

And how beautiful and glorious it was to think of dear old Trewavas, standing in its stately pride, still so honored and beloved of all! More beautiful still to feel that her feeble hands had kept sorrow from it, her unvalued love had saved it from a dreadful shame. She, the tiny creature, so mean, so small, so poor, so overlooked, had stood in the breach, and caught the arrows in her own heart, that would have pierced its pride. And there was no self praise in this thought, only a sort of humble joy that she had been permitted to do this that to her had been given the power to suffer in their stead.

Shut up as in a prison by her friendlessness, her sickness, her poverty, and her fear, the rumors of the outside world had not reached her, and she thought of Trewavas as peaceful, happy, safe. Above all, Sir Hilton was unscathed; no glimmer of the bitter truth had touched him, no finger pointed at him as she passed; his pride of birth and of name had suffered no shock; careless and happy, he was free to choose from the highest in the land another bride, as fair as poor Eleanor Maristowe. And if this thought caused a fear, Olive swept it away quickly. Lady Trewavas, too, would live out the remnant of her days in peace; no bowed by shame, and pain, her honored head would go down to its last sleep, still crowned with its ancient glory. Ah, what joy to purchase this peace for her, even at so great a cost! And Olive looked down upon her wasted hands and smiled.

"They thought I did not love them!" she said softly to herself. "My wilful words, my fierce temper, misled them all. And is this too great a return for what they did for me? No! I was homeless, and they gave me a home; an orphan, and they gave me a mother and brothers. Ah, how ungrateful I was!—how passionate, how wicked, how angry for fancied slights! It was not till that sorrow came, that I knew how much greater than my anger or my jealousy was my deep, deep love. Oh Trewavas, dear old Trewavas, may God bless you, and give me strength to bear on to the end!"

Again her tears fell, and through their mist rose up the visions of turret and terrace, mullioned window and stately hall. She saw herself as on the first day she entered Trewavas, a forlorn untaught child, gazing in wonder on these new scenes. Here was the dell where she had first seen English wild flowers, and gathered them in her little eager hands; here the shingly beach, where she had waited and watched so many times for Hilton's boat. Alas! that with these scenes there rose unbidden the dreadful wood, the Lady's Bower, and the lonely pool!

Good Advice.

DEAR SIRS,—I have been troubled with headache for over 40 years, and had it so bad about once a week that I was sometimes not expected to live. I was advised to use B. B. B., and have used 3 bottles. I now have an attack only once in four or five months, and feel that if I continue using it I will be entirely cured. Therefore I recommend it highly.

ADIEU, COUNT!

YESTERDAY was a great day in Quebec and Count Mercier and his government will long remember it. The Royal Commission reported strongly against them in the Baie des Chaleurs railway scandal, and Lieut. Gov Angers dismissed the whole gang then and there. The count has been flying too high lately, but this action will probably bring him to his senses. A new cabinet will be constituted at once.

ELECTION TALK.

The ward candidates are keeping pretty quiet, but before many days go by they will have to announce themselves.

How doth the busy candidate
Improve each shining minute
In proving to the electorate
That he's the man that's in it.

The would be councillors are laying low at present, but Mr. Eli Driver is driving himself towards Laurel as rapidly as a silvery tongue and electors' promises can carry him. Eli is a hustler from the word go.

Who'll be Orangeville's next reeve? This question is puzzling the ratepayers since there is a probability of Deputy-reeve Endacott entering the mayoralty race, and if he decides to do so it will change things generally.

Another ex reeve of the flowery township, Mr. W. B Jelly, is not saying very much these blustery days, but he keeps his right eye on the municipal gun just the same. It is not thought, however, that Mr. Jelly will return to public life.

A number of Deputy reeve Endacott's friends are inducing that gentleman to offer himself as a candidate for the mayoralty. Mr. Endacott has not yet decided to oppose Reeve Lindsey for the higher office of mayor. Nomination day, however, will bring many changes.

Mr. John Gillespie still stands by the statements he made to our municipal quizzer, which appeared in THE SUN of last week, and will not be a candidate for the reeveship of Amaranth. The ex-reeve is the hero of a hundred battles, and says he is through with municipal life—for the present, at least.

The municipal politicians of Amaranth have not become really excited yet, and consequently things are running very smoothly up there. An attempt is being made to bring Mr. Chris Braiden out for the reeveship, but we are informed Mr. B. will not offer himself as a candidate for the position. Christy believes in fair play, and he thinks Deputy reeve Johnston should be elevated to the chief magistrate's chair.

THE reeveship contest in Mono is expected to be the keenest municipal fight that has taken place in this section of the country for the past several years, and whether Island or Snell is chosen it will be a well earned victory. Each candidate is satisfied that he himself will fill the Mono chief magistrate's chair next year, but both are working like Trojans to gain the day. Mr. Island's announcement appears in an other column.

IT is almost certain that Ald. Youmans and Gillespie will have a tussle for the deputy reeveship of this town, and should no other candidate crop up the contest will be exceedingly interesting. Mr. Youmans has been one of the North ward's representatives in the council for three years, while Mr. Gillespie has represented the West for the last two years. The former is distinguished as the introducer of a by law prohibiting the running at large of cattle and many say he will lose votes on this account. Ald. Fiddis may be induced to enter the field, and there is also a possibility of Ald. Ketchum joining in the race. Should any three of the above-named gentlemen run which one do you think would be elected? A valuable prize will be given to the first person solving this problem.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE Reformers of Kingston have tendered Mr. Alex. Gunn the nomination of the Liberal party for that city for the House of Commons. Mr. Gunn was Sir John's old opponent, and when our departed leader and Mr. Gunn engaged in a contest the Limestone city was the centre of excitement. Mr. J. H. Metcalf, M. P. P., is the Conservative standard bearer.

UNDER the amendment made to the Assessment Act at the last session of the Ontario Legislature, the poll tax in cities towns, and villages is reduced from $2 to $1 and young men in townships, who are not assessed, will hereafter have only one day's labor instead of two. THE BALL IS ROLLING.—Our item to THE SUN last week on municipal matters has commenced the election ball arolling, and Mr. W. J. Laird is in the field for the council. Mr. Wm. McNabb of Rosemont is also in the field. The knowing ones say that Laird is sure to be the coming man.

SHE HAS RETURNED.—Our muse had fled for a considerable time, but she has returned again with greater splendor, and we are able to do it up brown once more. Here is a little ditty that she sang to us just after she returned. Although the muse was a little tired she got there just the same.

NOW YOU'VE GOT US.—Night in and night out we have been burning the midnight oil for little or no purpose—that is so far as personal honor goes;—but we have hit upon a plan by which we shall secure our due praise and recognition. We, Us & Co. are going to adopt a nom de plume, which you will see if you take the trouble to look at the bottom of this correspondence. Now we have given ourselves completely away and Pinkerton can call his detectives off. Wahoo!

LITTLE LOCALS.—Miss B. Lemon and Mr. Walker, the the new teachers, will take charge of our public school on Jan. 4th.....Mr. Robert Anderson of Minnesota is visiting his brother, Mr Charles Anderson.....The hunting epidemic has bounded from Glenoe to Cardwell.....The magic lantern show in the school house on Saturday was well attended.....Tea meetings are all the go just now.....We hope to see all the candidates' cards in THE SUN and every one around here should subscribe for the paper that gives all the news of Camilla and vicinity.

TEA-MEETING.—A grand tea meeting with phantasmagoria exhibition will take place in Morrison's hall here on Tuesday evening next under the auspices of the congregation of St. Alban's church. The programme will be a good one. Rev. J. W. Jones of Dunkalk, will be present and exhibit by his lantern wonderful scenes of the Emerald Isle, Mrs. Ketchum, Miss Haley, Miss Turnbull and number of other Orangeville friends will assist with the program. An excellant tea will be provided by the ladies and served from 5:30 till 7:30. Admission, 25 cents; children, 15 cents. Come and spend a pleasant evening.

GLENOE.

Lead Glenoe the Great, base Camilla disdain,
But lead thou on;
Let Camilla asses in the slough remain.
Still lead thou on!
In thee alone does the Banner township find
Good sense, great brain, and balanced mind.

We were not ever thus, but quickly did we rise,
E'en from the dust;
Baseball helped to rise us to the skies
While poor Camilla bust.
At showdaisy, too, we take the lead
In buns and butter, calf and colt and even fiery steed.

Thy power for good is recognized
On every side,
And if Camilla wished to be civilized
Here they must reside;
If they laugh at this advice and say "let it go to pot"
Barnum's ghost will take them to his show where it's hot.

CALEDON.

SALE OF LAND.—On Thursday next the real estate property of Mr. John Boylan, farmer, Caledon, will take place here. It will be offered in three parcels and includes 200 acres of valuable farm land, which should bring a good price.

LITTLE LOCALS.—Saturday morning's T. G. & G. up train struck and killed a horse a little below here. The train didn't even stop and the passengers only felt a slight jar.....The sale of overcoats and tea which was held here last Thursday was well patronized. The articles went cheap.....Dr. Allison held an inquest on Thursday evening on the body of the late John Johnston and a verdict of death from natural causes was returned.

KILLED BY A TREE.—Wednesday evening last week Mrs. Arkell received the sad intelligence that her son, George, had been fatally crushed by a tree which he was attempting to fell at Powassan, Muskoka. Miss Arkell, his sister, left immediately after the receipt of the message for Powassan, but arrived too late, his death taking place on Friday. The remains were brought here on Saturday and the funeral took place on Sunday and was very largely attended

WHERE THE WEARY ARE AT REST.—On Wednesday evening of last week John Johnston, an insane shoemaker, died rather suddenly at the residence of Mr. T. Smith where he boarded. The poor fellow kept his bed almost continuously for the past six months. Wednesday his dinner was taken up to him as usual and when ten time arrived Mrs. Smith went to call him, but found that the death messenger had been there and gathered him home. The burial took place at Silvercreek on Friday.

BLOUNT.

L.O.L OFFICERS ELECTED.—A large number of the members of L. O. L. No. 250, Mono Britons, assembled at their lodge-room on Tuesday evening for the purpose of transacting business and electing officers for the ensuing year. A most enjoyable evening was spent and the following officers will conduct the affairs of the lodge: Geo. Holmes, W. M; Jas Armstrong D. M.; Rich. Allen, C. Jas. Shaw, R. S; Thos. Holmes, jr., F. S.; Wm. Allen, T.; Thos. Holmes, sr., D. of C; Wm. J. Henry, S.; Geo. Brooks, Thos. Brooks, Jas. Armstrong, Adam Widdis, W. J. Allen, Committee.

MONO CENTRE.

RESPECTED.—Mr. Robert Wills intends to build a dwelling on the 7th line farm next spring. Business is good, Bob.

TEA MEETING.—The congregation the Methodist church are making extensive preparations for their tea-meeting which takes place on Xmas evening. Mr. James Snell will occupy the chair.

A DISTINGUISHED VISITOR.—"Pilery" McKenna paid Hockley a flying visit last week, and we hope to see him soon again. "Pilery" makes things lively when he gives this hamlet a call.

BREVITIES.—Mr. Thos. Stoe of Connor has moved to Hockley.....Mr. Jas Mupheford purchased a pair of spring colts from Mr. John Elgie. The price paid was $100.....Mr. John Beatty has added a grain-crushing machine to his saw mill and is now doing a rushing business.

RECOVERED.—Miss Agnes Moffatt, who has been afflicted with sickness for the past six years, is able to be out again. Miss Moffatt has had sixteen doctors treating her at different times, but none except the last one was called in appeared to do her any good. We are glad to see Miss M. enjoying good health once more.

BOWLING GREEN.

LITTLE ITEMS.—Thursday night was lodge night for for the L. O. L.....We hear that Mr. George Hammond had a very successful raffle last Friday evening.

EXAMINATIONS.—Miss Peters, our school teacher, intends holding a public examination on Monday, Dec. 21. We all expect to have a good time at the exam.

CHANGE OF TIME.—Service was held in the Methodist church at 10 o'clock a. m., last Sunday instead of 3 o'clock in the afternoon. This will rouse the church going citizens of Bowling Green earlier than usual on Sunday mornings.

EXPERT THRESHERS.—The farmers around this vicinity should patronize the best threshers, as time is money. We do not have to go far to find them. The Curry boys are getting great praise over a day's threshing done at Mr. Wm. Bremner's. It was the biggest day's threshing done around here for some time. The Curry boys are hustlers.

WHAT THE PEOPLE WANT TO KNOW

Who don't take THE SUN.

When we will have a tea-meeting.

When there will be another raffle.

Who is the wisest man in Amaranth.

What Geo. B. is thinking about now.

Who wrote last week's correspondence to THE SUN.

MONO CENTRE.

Mrs Thompson of Arthur is a guest at Mr. Glover's.

MILL RENTED.—Mr. Thos. Patterson has rented his flour mill, on the 4th line, to Mr. James Little. No doubt he will make the venture pay.

BACHELORS' BALL.—The Bachelors' ball, which was the most brilliant and social event of the season, took place here on Wednesday night last, and added another to the long list of successes achieved by our "bachelors" in the line of entertainment. The committee in charge spared neither time nor effort to ensure the pleasure of their guests, and are to be congratulated on the success of the affair. The music was excellent and under its controlling spell had dancing was impossible. Tea time arrived and, as everybody expected, the gay bachelors were equal to the occasion. They served supper in a novel way, and this is the way it was done: The bachelors furnished each couple with a steaming cup of coffee and a rather large paper-bagful of cakes, tarts, etc., in fact more than any three couples could devour and feel comfortable afterwards. After supper the boys removed the dishes and gathered the bags and piled them in a corner of the room. And the dancing commenced again.

WHAT WE WOULD LIKE TO KNOW.

Who was the belle of the ball.

Which young lady inquired for Harry R.

Why our teacher looked so severe next day.

Who Robt. H. took home in time for breakfast.

If George is the "Whiteheaded" boy at Relessey.

What our "bachelors" think of the Amaranth dude.

Who Alf G. borrowed the smile from for the occasion.

If Will M. thought he monopolized the Bell of the ball.

If Johnny T. thinks he is the masher of the neighborhood.

Why A. H. let C. McG. have such a Mary time Wednesday evening.

If Mono Centre girls think it fair for Will H. to import Orangeville girls for our high class ensembliez.

If there is an orchestra around the country that can beat the one which was in attendance Wednesday evening.

If Mono Centre bachelors are following the example of

"White Wings That Never Grow Whiskers."

TEA MEETING.—The congregation of St. Matthew's church, 25 side road, con. 5, will give an entertainment on Thursday evening Dec. 29 Addresses will be delivered by Rev. A. C. Watt and Rev. G. B. Morley; songs, readings and duets by leading Orangeville stars and others. A good substantial tea will be served in elegant style by the ladies from 5:30 till 7:30. A sad accident happened at Beeton last week resulting in the death of Mr. John Coffey, an employee of the railway. He was shunting cars, when the rod of the patent coupler caught in his clothes and dragged him along until his foot fastened in a frog, pulling him down, when the wheels passed over one of his legs, smashing it terribly. Doctors were called in and an amputation followed but the poor fellow only survived the operation about an hour. He leaves a wife and two children.

ADIEU, COUNT!

YESTERDAY was a great day in Quebec and Count Mercier and his government will long remember it. The Royal Commission reported strongly against them in the Baie des Chaleurs railway scandal, and Lieut. Gov Angers dismissed the whole gang then and there. The count has been flying too high lately, but this action will probably bring him to his senses. A new cabinet will be constituted at once.

ELECTION TALK.

The ward candidates are keeping pretty quiet, but before many days go by they will have to announce themselves.

How doth the busy candidate
Improve each shining minute
In proving to the electorate
That he's the man that's in it.

The would be councillors are laying low at present, but Mr. Eli Driver is driving himself towards Laurel as rapidly as a silvery tongue and electors' promises can carry him. Eli is a hustler from the word go.

Who'll be Orangeville's next reeve? This question is puzzling the ratepayers since there is a probability of Deputy-reeve Endacott entering the mayoralty race, and if he decides to do so it will change things generally.

Another ex reeve of the flowery township, Mr. W. B Jelly, is not saying very much these blustery days, but he keeps his right eye on the municipal gun just the same. It is not thought, however, that Mr. Jelly will return to public life.

A number of Deputy reeve Endacott's friends are inducing that gentleman to offer himself as a candidate for the mayoralty. Mr. Endacott has not yet decided to oppose Reeve Lindsey for the higher office of mayor. Nomination day, however, will bring many changes.

Mr. John Gillespie still stands by the statements he made to our municipal quizzer, which appeared in THE SUN of last week, and will not be a candidate for the reeveship of Amaranth. The ex-reeve is the hero of a hundred battles, and says he is through with municipal life—for the present, at least.

The municipal politicians of Amaranth have not become really excited yet, and consequently things are running very smoothly up there. An attempt is being made to bring Mr. Chris. Braiden out for the reeveship, but we are informed Mr. B. will not offer himself as a candidate for the position. Christy believes in fair play, and he thinks Deputy reeve Johnston should be elevated to the chief magistrate's chair.

THE reeveship contest in Mono is expected to be the keenest municipal fight that has taken place in this section of the country for the past several years, and whether Island or Snell is chosen it will be a well earned victory. Each candidate is satisfied that he himself will fill the Mono chief magistrate's chair next year, but both are working like Trojans to gain the day. Mr. Island's announcement appears in an other column.

IT is almost certain that Ald. Youmans and Gillespie will have a tussle for the deputy reeveship of this town, and should no other candidate crop up the contest will be exceedingly interesting. Mr. Youmans has been one of the North ward's representatives in the council for three years, while Mr. Gillespie has represented the West for the last two years. The former is distinguished as the introducer of a by law prohibiting the running at large of cattle and many say he will lose votes on this account. Ald. Fiddis may be induced to enter the field, and there is also a possibility of Ald. Ketchum joining in the race. Should any three of the above-named gentlemen run which one do you think would be elected? A valuable prize will be given to the first person solving this problem.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Mr. Gunn was Sir John's old opponent, and when our departed leader and Mr. Gunn engaged in a contest the Limestone city was the centre of excitement. Mr. J. H. Metcalfe, M. P. P., is the Conservative standard bearer.

The train didn't even stop and the passengers only felt a slight jar.....The sale of overcoats and tea which was held here last Thursday was well patronized. The articles went cheap.....Dr. Allison held an inquest on Thursday evening on the body of the late John Johnston and a verdict of death from natural causes was returned.

KILLED BY A TREE.—Wednesday evening last week Mrs. Arkell received the sad intelligence that her son, George, had been fatally crushed by a tree which he was attempting to fell at Powassan, Muskoka. Miss Arkell, his sister, left immediately after the receipt of the message for Powassan, but arrived too late, his death taking place on Friday. The remains were brought here on Saturday and the funeral took place on Sunday and was very largely attended

WHERE THE WEARY ARE AT REST.—On Wednesday evening of last week John Johnston, an insane shoemaker, died rather suddenly at the residence of Mr. T. Smith where he boarded. The poor fellow kept his bed almost continuously for the past six months. Wednesday his dinner was taken up to him as usual and when tea time arrived Mrs. Smith went to call him, but found that the death messenger had been there and gathered him home. The burial took place at Silvercreek on Friday.

BLOUNT.

L.O.L OFFICERS ELECTED.—A large number of the members of L. O. L. No. 259, Mono Britons, assembled at their lodge-room on Tuesday evening for the purpose of transacting business and electing officers for the ensuing year. A most enjoyable evening was spent and the following officers will conduct the affairs of the lodge: Geo. Holmes, W. M; Jas Armstrong D. M.; Rich. Allen, C. Jas. Shaw, R. S; Thos. Holmes, jr., F. S.; Wm. Allen, T.; Thos. Holmes, sr., D. of C; Wm. J. Henry, S.; Geo. Brooks, Thos. Brooks, Jas. Armstrong, Adam Widdis, W. J. Allen, Committee.

BOWLING GREEN.

LITTLE FIRE.—Thursday night was lodge night for the L. O. L.....We hear that Mr. George Hammond had a very successful raffle last Friday evening.

EXAMINATIONS.—Miss Peters, our school teacher, intends holding a public examination on Monday, Dec. 21. We all expect to have a good time at the exam.

CHANGE OF TIME.—Service was held in the Methodist church at 10 o'clock a. m., last Sunday instead of 3 o'clock in the afternoon. This will cause the church going citizens of Bowling Green earlier than usual on Sunday morning.

EXPERT THRESHERS.—The farmers around this vicinity should patronize the best threshers, as time is money. We do not have to go far to find them. The Curry boys are getting great praise over a day's threshing done at Mr. Wm. Brenner's. It was the biggest day's threshing done around here for some time. The Curry boys are hustlers.

WHAT THE PEOPLE WANT TO KNOW

Who don't take THE SUN.
When we will have a tea-meeting.
When there will be another raffle.
Who is the wisest man in Amaranth.
What Geo. B. is thinking about now.
Who wrote last week's correspondence to THE SUN.
What W. B. J. will do about nomination day.
If Eli Driver has his speech prepared for nomination day.
How many new faces will grace the council board next year.
If it is easier to run with the crowd than to walk by yourself.
Why C. B. won't consent to offer himself for the reeveship.

MONO CENTRE.

Mrs Thompson of Arthur is a guest at Mr. Glover's.

MILL RENTED—Mr. Thos. Patterson has rented his flour mill, on the 4th line, to Mr. James Little. No doubt he will make the venture pay.

BACHELORS' BALL.—The Bachelors' ball, which was the most brilliant and social event of the season, took place here on Wednesday night last, and added another to the long list of successes achieved by our "bachelors" in the line of entertainment. The committee in charge spared neither time nor effort to ensure the pleasure of their guests, and are to be congratulated on the success of the affair. The music was excellent and under its controlling spell bad dancing was impossible. Tea time arrived and, as everybody expected, the gay bachelors were equal to the occasion. They served supper in a novel way, and this is the way it was done: The bachelors furnished each couple with a steaming cup of coffee and a rather large paper-bagful of cakes, tarts, etc., in fact more than any three couples could devour and feel comfortable afterwards. After supper the boys removed the dishes and gathered the bags and piled them in a corner of the room. And the dancing commenced again.

WHAT WE WOULD LIKE TO KNOW.

Who was the belle of the ball.
Which young lady inquired for Harry R.
Why our teacher looked so severe next day.
Who Robt. H. took home in time for breakfast.
If George is the "Whiteheaded" boy at Relessey.
What our "bachelors" think of the Amaranth dude.
Who Alf G. borrowed the smile from for the occasion.
If Will M. thought he monopolized the Belle of the ball.
If Johnny T. thinks he is the masher of the neighborhood.
Why A. H. let C. McG. have such a Mary time Wednesday evening.
If Mono Centre girls think it fair for Will H. to import Orangeville girls for our high class assemblies.
If there is an orchestra around the country that can beat the one which was in attendance Wednesday evening.
If Mono Centre bachelors are following the example of "White Wings That Never Grow Whiskers."

ELDER.

TEA MEETING.—The congregation of St. Matthew's church, 25 side road, con. 5, will give an entertainment on Thursday evening Dec. 29 Addresses will be delivered by Rev. A. C. Watt and Rev. G. H. Morley; songs, readings and duets by leading Orangeville stars and others.—A good substantial tea will be served in elegant style by the ladies from 5:30 till 7:30. Tickets, 25 cents, children, 10 cents. Proceeds in aid of the debt on the church building. We trust all will turn out on this occasion.

MONEY TO LOAN, CHEAP.—Farmers who are paying high rates of interest should call on W. Still, his terms for money are the best in Ontario.

Did you ever buy a horse and not have some misgivings as to his points till they were fully tested? Not so with Ayer's Sarsaparilla; you may be sure of it at the start. It never disappoints those who give it a fair trial.

The teachers in training at the Orangeville model school finished their term on Friday last. Nearly all the "modelites" have secured situations as teachers in rural schools.

The young People's Christian Endeavor Society of St. Andrew's church gave a concert in the basement of the church Tuesday evening. A good pro-

MASONIC OFFICERS ELECTED.—A large number of the members of Harris lodge, No. 216, A. F. & A. M., met in their comfortably furnished hall in the Jackson block on Tuesday evening, and a great deal of enthusiasm was manifested. The election of officers for the ensuing year took place and resulted as follows: Robert Irvine, W. M.; G. W. Parks, S. W.; Joseph Coles, J.

The Methodist Sunday school scholars' anniversary, which takes place on New Year's day, promises to be one of the biggest events of the season.

Rev. W. A. Hunter of Toronto lectured to a fair-sized crowd in the basement of St. Andrew's church on Friday evening, his subject being "The Good Old Times."

The young People's Christian Endeavor Society of St. Andrew's church gave a concert in the basement of the church Tuesday evening. A good program was provided and everything passed off pleasantly.

YOU WANT—A nice tea or dinner set for Christmas, don't you? Lovely assortment at MacAdam's, and very cheap.

DUFFERIN FARMERS' INSTITUTE.—The members of the Dufferin Farmers' Institute hold their annual meeting in the town hall, Shelburne, to-morrow (Friday). New officers will be elected and several important subjects will be discussed.

TEA MEETING.—The congregation of St. Alban's church, Camille, will give their annual entertainment in Morrison's hall on Tuesday evening next. The program is excellent and the attendance will no doubt be large. Tea served from 5:30 to 7:30.

MARKET DATE CHANGED.—To accommodate the Christmas and New Year's trade the Orangeville market days have been changed from Thursdays, the 24th and 31st to Tuesdays, the 22nd and 29th. The weekly prizes, as advertised, will be awarded on those days.

ENTERTAINMENT.—The members of St. Matthew's church, Elder, have decided to hold a tea meeting and concert on Tuesday evening, the 29th. A varied program has been prepared for occasion and a pleasant time is promised. Tea will be served from 5:30 till 7:30. Proceeds will be devoted to reducing the debt on the church.

DON'T FORGET TO CALL.—Call at J. M. Bennett's liquor store for Pure Cider, Brandies, Hennessy's Brandy in wood or glass, Burk's Irish, and Canadian Whiskies, (warranted pure and good). First class quality of Port and Sherry wines for medicinal purposes. Gilt Edge and Crystal ales in fine condition, quarts and pints.

PRESENTATION.—On Tuesday last the teachers in training at the Orangeville model school presented Mr. M. N. Armstrong, principal of the public school, with a handsome writing-desk as a slight acknowledgement of his efforts in their behalf during the model term just closed. In a brief speech Mr. Armstrong thanked them for the present and the motive that prompted it, and wished them the greatest measure of success in their new fields.

COLORED PRINTING.—THE SUN'S job rooms are furnished with the best facilities for turning out all kinds of colored printing. We have purchased the right to use Barnwall's patent process for colored printing for Orangeville and Grand Valley, which enables us to print a bill in many different colors with one impression. The work is the most attractive kind and cannot fail to find public favor. Call at THE SUN office and see samples.

S. O. I. P. A. OFFICERS.—The annual meeting of Tyrone lodge, No. 5, S.O.I.P.A. took place on Tuesday evening, when the following officers were elected: A. A. Hughson, Pres.; J. F. Bradley, vice-Pres.; H. Gillespie, Treas. J. W. Ferguson, Chap.; B. McGuire, F. S.; W. Wallace, R. S.; A. McKenzy, I. G.; Jas. Graham, O. G.; Ed. Clark, Jas. Bailey, G. McBride, Jas. Patterson, Robt. Wilson, Committee. Mr. Hugh Ferguson is the district deputy master.

CAPTURED MARKET PRIZES.—The market on Thursday was well attended and a great deal of produce was purchased by town and city buyers. The prizes were awarded as follows: Best pair turkeys, Michael Armstrong, Caledon, $1 cash, by H. Crozier; pair chickens, Mrs. Jos. Maxwell, Caledon, THE SUN for one year; tub of butter, Mrs. Jas. Sanderson, Amaranth, $1 cash, by Crozier & Fleming; roll of butter, W. B. Marshall, East Garafraxa, Post newspaper free for one year.

THE LOCAL PAPER FIRST.—Because some weekly papers offer an enormous amount of reading matter don't think that they are of more value than a local paper. The best paper for home news should come first on the list, because it devotes itself exclusively to the interests of your town and county. It tells what is going on about you in the religious, social and commercial world, and one column of its local matter is of more importance to you than a dozen novels complete. It is not the amount read but the quantity digested that improves your intellect. Subscribe for THE SUN. Only $1 per year in advance.

BOYS CAN MAKE MONEY FAST.—Any active boy can make plenty of money in his neighborhood by re plating tableware and jewelry with one of the Magic Electric Plating Outfits. Those who have already secured one of these machines are making from $20 to $ 5 a week. The price of the plating outfit is $10, but we have arranged to supply it to one boy only in each neighborhood free for a few hours work, which can be done after school or on Saturday. No capital required. Any boy sending his address and referring to some merchant in his town as to honesty will receive full particulars by return mail. This is a permanent money making business for the right kind of a boy. Apply at once. Address LADIES PICTORIAL CO., Toronto, Ont.

OLD SUBSCRIBERS.—Mr. John Curry of Farmington called in on Saturday and renewed his subscription to THE SUN for the thirty first time, and Mr. Michael Armstrong of Caledon, who is also one of our first subscribers, called around on Tuesday and followed Mr. Curry's example. It is astonishing the number of people who have been taking THE SUN since it was first published and are still subscribers to Dufferin's reliable paper. We are always glad to see the veterans drop in and have a chat, for every one of them can tell an interesting tale of the good old times that have gone forever. The "old guard" are disappearing, but we venture to say we have more subscribers who have been taking the paper ever since it started than any other country journal that has been cruising on the journalistic sea for a similar period.

MAKE NO MISTAKE.—Have the best raisins and currants; will cost you no more than common fruit. MacAdam's.

HONORIC OFFICERS ELECTED.—A large number of the members of Hayes lodge, No. 216, A. F. & A. M., met in their comfortably furnished hall in the Jackson block on Tuesday evening, and a great deal of enthusiasm was manifested. The election of officers for the ensuing year took place and resulted as follows: Robert Irwin, W. M.; C. W. Sydie, S. W.; Joseph Helm, J. W.; N. Gordon, Chap.; J. K. Dewstar, Treas.; George Irwin, Sec.; David Dick Tyler; R. W. Bro. J. C. Fox and Bro. Dr. Smith, Auditors. After the usual routine of business was gone through the brethren sat down to a beautiful and sumptuous repast to which ample justice had been done. The brethren left for their homes about 11 o'clock, well pleased with the proceedings. The installation of the officers elect will take place on Monday, the 28th inst., that day being kept as St. John the Evangelist's day, which falls on Sunday this year.

BILL WAS FIRED.—Last Wednesday night Bill Irwin took an overdose of "red eye" and kicked up a racket in the Paisley house. The bartender escorted Bill to the door, but Bill felt so good that he could not contain himself and burst forth in terrific yells, which were interspersed with blood curdling oaths. Patrolman Parkin happened to be around about the time William was putting the tities on his oration and he persuaded the young fellow to postpone the speech indefinitely. But Bill wasn't built that way and he would finish his speech then and there or not at all. The peeler thought the latter clause the best course to pursue and he took Bill in tow and started towards the North ward police station. Before reaching their destination, however, Bill relented and was allowed to slip quietly home. He accepted an invitation to have a few minutes' chat with Cadi Pattullo on Saturday and the latter gave him some sound advice and requested Bill to leave $5 and costs for the benefit of the town. He did so and immediately quit the magistrate's presence.

LOW SALARIED TEACHERS.—The inspectors of schools has declared that the standard of teaching at the public school in Orangeville is too low. He says: "The school is not making satisfactory progress. The majority of the staff are weak in teaching power. Good teachers refuse to remain long in this school, as they claim that they get no encouragement. School keeper, not school teacher, seem to be in favor at present. A very indifferent school for a progressive town like Orangeville." This means that the school board does not pay high enough salaries for the teachers. The meagreness of the income offered to qualified teachers in too many places is a disgrace. Trustees seem to forget that teachers have had to work for their education, and that they have to live. Just so long as the salaries are inadequate will teachers give but a perfunctory attention to their duties. They will feel that their work is not appreciated, and will throw no heart into it.—Shelburne Economist. Now, dear friend, there's no occasion for a rush. Just compare the salaries the Orangeville public school teachers receive and those of your or any other town, and see if there's such an awful difference. It runs in our mind that our teachers are paid about as well as the teachers in other towns.

'TWAS A GREAT SUCCESS.—The social tea and concert given in the town hall on Friday evening was an unqualified success, and the members of the High School Girls' Beneficent Society are to be congratulated on the satisfactory results of their efforts. Our up-town contemporaries found fault with the movement, and did their little best to keep people from attending either the tea or concert. But the people came in crowds and not a solitary one regretted that he or she was present. The market-room was converted into a dining-hall and the young ladies of the O. H. S. B. S. had three large tables loaded down with good things. A large number partook of the hospitality of the kind hearted girls who had charge of the undertaking, and comments on the spread were both numerous and favorable. After supper the town hall was crowded to the doors; the poor man and the rich man, the poor man's child and rich man's child, sat side by side and the seating capacity of the hall was not sufficient to accommodate the crowd and many were content to remain standing, while others could not even get inside the hall and had to retrace their steps homeward. Principal Steele acted as chairman, and in his address stated the object and working of the society. The musical portion of the program was then proceeded with. Miss Pearson, Miss Turnbull, Miss Ritchie, Miss Conner, Mrs. J. Ketchum and Mrs. W. F. Seymour sang solos which were well received, as was a piano solo by Miss M. Marshall. Bandmaster Ketchum of the Citizens' band played a cornet solo and Mr. W. F. Seymour responded with a clarionet solo, both gentlemen being loudly applauded. An instrumental piece, by Messrs. Atkinson and Crozier. The H. S glee club sang two glees, and Rev. F. Bort of Cardwell delivered an address and eulogized the young ladies in their Christian mission, and the program was brought to a close by singing "God Save the Queen." Little or no expense was incurred in getting up the entertainment. Nickles, dimes and quarters were dropped into a bowl at the door, the total amounting to $25.55. The society has on hand $15 in cash and some clothing, which will be distributed on Christmas eve amongst those who require something to spend a happy Christmas.

SPEND LOVE NOT HATE SPEARED.

And Given a "Hard Pill for the Evil Man to Swallow."

To the Editor of THE SUN.

DEAR SIR,—Last week's issue of THE SUN contains a letter from Mr. T. Fenwick, of Woodbridge. This gentleman has been jagging around the bush "in the dark" and thinks he opened your humble servant with a Scotch "spice." I would like to say a few words in answer to his remarks. He wants to know "who teach these doctrines about 'infants in hell a span long,' 'thirty-a-million people,' and 'unending torments of hell!'" He says: "Answer fairly and squarely without any dodging." I answer concisely to the point, endless torment doctrine and its kindred subject-matter is taught by the devil and his angels. But perhaps our friend would like to know something about the wonderful "Confession" now agitating the minds of Presbyterian scholars. Rev. H. P. Smith is reported then by the press, when discussing Dr. Briggs' position before the Presbyterian General Assembly at Detroit recently:—"He quoted the passages of the confession that point to a limited atonement, and that about elect infants, and said the revision recently recommended by the committee would not very long ago have been considered rank heresy. I don't understand Prof Briggs' views on progressive sanctification (laughter), but that may not be because they are not clear. The confession has many points that are often misunderstood. The desiderata of the Presbyterian Church is that every member (thirty thousand beings drop into the unpeachable and unending torments of hell. Think of this, awful better—you can't do it and keep out of the lunatic asylum. I think most of us have a secret hope that in some way God will find a way out of this. If Dr. Briggs can find this in the bible, let us be glad. On a strict construction of the confession, of course, he is wrong, but will you, who mean to make such a radical change of our confession as say that all infants are saved, not leave a little margin for Dr. Briggs? Prejudice is easily raised but not allayed. The theological stomach is delicate and made squeamish." The real student of scripture with prophetic eye can see the outcome. Sectarianism and her musty creeds are doomed. The National Church is going under. The bible says:—"Come out of her (not out of the one True Church), my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plague." Eternal torment doctrine is not taught in the scriptures. "Let the God-dishonoring, saint-perplexing, scoffer-making, and wholly absurd blasphemy go—back to its vile and unworthy source, the devil.

It is a healthy sign, in one way, that orthodoxy, so-called, is getting ashamed of the bug-bear of theology. But they should not forget that "The wages of sin is death." It is not my intention to deal in personalities, but would say, "Search the Scriptures," "seek and seek humbly." "Behold we bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people." Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord."

Tell the whole world the blessed tidings;
Speak of the time of rest that nears;
Tell the oppressed of every nation,
Jubilee lasts a thousand years."

GENTLEMEN,—Your Hagyard's Yellow Oil is worth its weight in gold for both internal and external use. During the late La Grippe epidemic we found it a most excellent preventive, and for sprained limbs, etc., there is nothing to equal it.

SHELBURNE.

(From Echo and Economist.)

A SKIPPER ON PADDLING.—At the last meeting of the village council a by-law to regulate transient traders was introduced, read the required number of times and adopted. The license was fixed at $50, with a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $20 and costs for each and every day on which business is conducted without the necessary license.

MILLING CO.'S OFFICERS.—The officers of the Horning's Mills Milling Co., are as follows: President, Rich. Slack; vice-president, Vickers Bates; secretary, J. F. Breen; treasurer, Robt. McGhee; directors, R. Slack, R. McGhee, V. Bates, J. F. Breen, Wm. Henry, Geo. Laking, J. A. Best, Ed. Ferris, Alex. Tipling, Thos. Barber and R. W. Fawster.

REV. DR DOWNEY DEAD.—Word was received in Shelburne last week of the death of Rev. Dr. Downey of Paris, Ill., late of Berlin, Ont. The reverend gentleman was in Shelburne on several occasions in his ministerial capacity in connection with the United Brethren Church, and had made some warm friends in this locality. His death will be deeply regretted.

INCIPIENT FIRE.—Last Saturday afternoon or evening there was a fire scare on a small scale at E. Berwick & Co.'s establishment. We understand the floor caught fire through some defect in the furnace fittings. Of course the fire was soon extinguished, but had it occurred during the night a most serious conflagration would, in all probability, have been the result.

THE ELECTIONS.—There is but little stir yet in the adjoining townships. In Shelburne the only new aspirant for municipal honors as yet is Mr. James E. Marshall. He is already in the field. There is some talk also of Mr. A. B. Noble being brought out. There seems to be considerable dissatisfaction among the ratepayers of the town, but just what the culmination will be it is difficult to foresee.

A WIDOW'S RASH ACT.—It is reported around town that Mr. Donald Fraser of Maple Valley, is married to a festive widow of this town, named Mrs. Snider. Mr. Fraser went to Toronto on Friday last and the bewitching widow followed him on Saturday. She made numerous enquiries respecting Mr. Fraser's financial standing from real estate of Shelburne and appeared quite elated when she was told that he owned a good farm of 100 acres near Maple Valley. We fancy she will feel a trifle disappointed when she learns that Mr. Fraser deeded the farm to his son, Mr. Athol Fraser of Beaver, British Columbia, last June.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Weak stomach.—The wisest cannot enumerate one quarter of the distressing symptoms arising from imperfect or disordered digestion, all of which can be relieved by these admirable Pills. They remove cankery taste from the mouth, flatulency and constipation. Holloway's Pills rouse the stomach, liver, and every other organ, thereby bringing digestion to that healthy tone which fully enables it to convert all we eat and drink to the nourishment of our bodies. Hence these Pills are the surest strengtheners and the safest restoratives in nervousness, wasting, and chronic debility. Holloway's Pills are infallible remedies for impaired appetite, eructations, and a multitude of other disagreeable symptoms which render the lives of thousands miserable indeed. These pills are approved by all classes.

A Paris correspondent sends a startling article to the New York Herald in which he says that it is suspected that Emperor William of Germany is insane. This opinion is gaining strength among the diplomats of Europe, and is caused by the many eccentricities of the kaiser. His mind seems unbalanced in regard to theatricals just now. He raves over the simplest and most worthless plays. His peculiar manner of dressing is another indication of his madness. Sometimes he wears a dozen different costumes in a day. His intelligent subjects are becoming alarmed at his condition.

The perfection of Edison's invention to make a locomotive run 100 miles an hour would give the Canadian route to Europe a great advantage over the American one. Canada projects far into the Atlantic, hundreds of miles nearer Europe than the United States, and when ocean passengers can travel over the land at the rate of 100 miles an hour in luxurious parlor cars, free from the annoyance of smoke and dust, they will probably take the route which involves the shortest ocean voyage.

For Pain or Colds.

GENTLEMEN,—Fifteen months ago I had a beating breast. I tried a number of remedies but got no relief. I then tried Hagyard's Yellow Oil, which gave me instant relief. It is the best thing I ever used for all kinds of pain or cold.

MRS. JOHN CORBETT St Mary's, Ont.

Clarence Gould of Detroit, whom Miss Edna Percy of Newburgh rejected for Mr Fullerton of the latter place arrived at Napanee the other day. It is said that Mr. Gould intends instituting an action for damages for breach of promise of marriage against Mrs Fullerton, nee Miss Edna Percy. Gould is the son of W. J. Gould, one of Detroit's leading wholesale merchants. The bridal trousseau which he purchased for his prospective bride cost $3,000.

G. H. Campbell, Dominion immigration commissioner, arrived at Ottawa from Winnipeg Tuesday morning on business with the department of agriculture. He says the work of propagandism will be actually carried on in Dakota this winter, and that he anticipates a great outflow of settlers from that state to Manitoba and the territories in the spring. The results of the past season had been most encouraging.

Prof Saunders of the Central Experimental Farm has returned from the Western States, whither he went to report upon the beet root sugar industry. His observations will be submitted to the Government at an early date. They will indicate that a large area in Canada is equally available for beet root cultivation as in the United States where the industry has assumed enormous proportions.

Enjoying a Blessing.

Dear Sirs,—Last summer my younger sisters were taken very badly with croup, indeed we were almost in despair, having little hope of curing them. Finally we applied Hagyard's Yellow Oil, and to our great joy it cured them perfectly, and they are now enjoying the blessing of perfect health.

What is more annoying than going about constantly hawking and spitting? This is the result of catarrh, and Nasal Balm will cure any case when faithfully used.

Never leave a good umbrella in the vestibule of the church, no matter how pious the people who go there pretend to be," is the advice given by the Berlin News.

Headaches, dimness of vision, partial deafness, hawking and spitting invariably result from catarrh, which may be cured by the use of Nasal Balm. It has cured others, why not you?

A Change For the Better.

SIRS,—I have taken three bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters and find it a splendid medicine for constipation and poor appetite. I will continue taking it as it is a great blessing and I feel a great change in my health since taking it.

The system of waterworks for supplying the village of Georgetown was completed, with the exception of a few details, last week, when the water was let into the pipes of the reservoir. The contractors are Messrs. Garson & Purser of Hamilton and the price is in the neighborhood of $40,000. The water is supplied by springs from the limestone ridge running from Hamilton. The reservoir has a capacity of 320,000 gallons and gives an average pressure of 87 lbs to the inch.

An exchange says "The latest social craze is called a 'foot social.' Each gentleman receives an envelope containing the name of a lady present, together with her height. He then proceeds to pay so many cents per foot for the privilege of entertaining her for the evening. Quite a sum of money is usually realized, and tall girls are usually imported for the occasion, although sometimes a young man will pay a big price per foot for a short girl.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

Did the "Maid" Matchless. It restores the color to gray hair; promotes a healthy and vigorous growth; prevents the formation of dandruff, and cures humors and eruptions of the scalp. It prevents baldness, and imparts a delicate and lasting perfume.

"Several months ago my hair commenced falling out, and in a few weeks my head was almost bald. I tried many remedies, but they did no good. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my head was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best in the world."—T. Munkley, Sharon Grove, Ky.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for a number of years, and it has always given me satisfaction. It is an excellent dressing, prevents the hair from turning gray, insures its vigorous growth, and keeps the scalp white and clean."—Mary A. Jackson, Salem, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for promoting the growth of the hair, and think it unequaled. For restoring the hair to its original color, and for a dressing, it cannot be surpassed."—Mrs. Geo. La Fever, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

"Ayer's Hair Vigor is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair and makes it glossy and soft. The Vigor is also a cure for dandruff."—J. W. Bowen, Editor "Enquirer," McArthur, Ohio.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past two years, and found it all it is represented to be. It restores the natural color to gray hair, causes the hair to grow freely, and keeps it soft and pliant."—Mrs. M. V. Day, Cohoes, N. Y.

"My father, at about the age of fifty, lost all the hair from the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor the hair began coming, and, in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."—P. J. Callen, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

The Best Rock Salt, for Stock.

Read what Prof. Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says regarding proper ways of salting stock:—"Dairy cattle should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has convinced me that when cows are denied salt for a period of even one week they will yield from 5½ to 17½ per cent. less milk, and that of an inferior quality. Such milk will, on an average, turn sour in twenty four hours less time than milk drawn from the same or similar cows receiving salt every day, all other conditions of treatment being equal."

THE only chemically pure Salt ever discovered, analysed 99 84-100 Pure Salt. All kinds of stock will do better where this Salt is used; one ton will go four times as far as common salt, hence it is cheaper. It is the finest Salt in the world for the preservation of all kinds of meat, all the large packers are using it. It is sold cheaper than any other lump salt. We guarantee this Salt as advertised. Make a trial and you will always use it; we have in stock fine and coarse, at

—OR—

TRUE TO THE LAST.

CHAPTER XXV. (Continued).

So they came and went, these flitting visions, while the fire died into darkness, and the lamp burned dim; and Olive's weary head drooped at last in sleep, with tears still staining the wan cheeks, and glistening on the long dark lashes. So when there came to her door the tap of a gentle hand, she heard it not; and when a quiet figure, stealing in, stood by her side, and looked down upon her white worn face, she saw it not, nor dreamed whose tears fell, pitying here.

"Opal! Opal!" whispered Florian, as she softly took one of her little wan hands, and kissed it. "Opal, awake! I am here to help you, Opal."

Then the large fevered eyes opened slowly, and gazed in terror on the sob bing figure by her side.

"Florian, why are you here?" said Olive with a sudden start. "You must not be seen with me—you must not speak to me. Go away, I entreat you! My name is not Opal. I am Olive Varcoe. There, now you will leave me, I know."

Suddenly Olive snatched her hand from Florian's grasp, and waited to see her turn away in horror.

"Always Opal to me," said Florian, with arms closely clinging round the wasted figure of her friend, "Always dear Opal to me! Olive Varcoe is too noble, too good, too great; I should not dare to kiss her; but Opal I can love."

Ah, then tears burst forth indeed, and Olive's wasted arms fell about her neck, as, in her weakness, she drooped forward on Florian's shoulder.

"Then you do not hate me? and you forgive me for having deceived you?" she said. "I have never deceived another," she added. "I have never dared to place myself in another home since I left yours."

"And now you must come to mine again," said Florian, "and at once. There is not a moment to be lost."

Olive raised her eyes to gaze at her friend with wonder, and to shake her head in sorrowful refusal.

"But you must," persisted Florian, "indeed you must, Opal; unless you have strength to bear the excitement of an arrest—unless you have courage at last to speak the truth."

Olive's dead white face grew whiter, and her eyes, glazed with sudden terror fixed themselves on Florian in mute agony.

"They have long been searching for you," continued Florian, in a hurried way, "and two people will be here at eight to-morrow morning, who suspect that Olympe Valsey is Olive Varcoe. My dear, perhaps you have courage to bear it, you will do right to stay and confess to them at once the bitter truth."

"You give me cruel counsel, Florian," said Olive, raising herself from Florian's embrace, and sitting upright. "Weak, exhausted, as I am, I will not be a coward, and turn back upon the path in which I have chosen to walk. But I will stand alone—I will not ruin you. I can but die, if they arrest me. I think—I fear—I am too weak to suffer much more."

Her trembling hands, her quivering lips, her wan face, cruelly attested the truth of this; yet her determination still to screen, if she could, the Trowavas name from infamy, was as strong as ever.

Florian looked on her with tearful eyes, and a color gradually deepening on her cheeks.

"Olive," said she, "whether you be right or wrong, I cannot say; but I know there is one man who will not permit you to slay yourself—one friend who will snatch this fearful task from your hands. He has been gathering evidence; he can prove now what he only guessed at before. Will you come with me at once."

"And leave all here as it is?" asked Olive.

"Yes," replied Florian. "I have a friend who will take care of these for you; and if there be anything among your valuables that you wish particularly to have, it shall be with you to-morrow."

Olive smiled faintly. It seemed to her, then, that she wished for nothing, she cared for nothing, but to lie down in peace and die. Without further questions she put her hand on Florian's arm, she aided her weak steps, and led her out on the great staircase. In that large house, with its ten stories, there were many tenants; and some of those were still up, but none made a remark as the two girls crept silently down stairs. In passing the good laundress's door, Olive looked at it a moment wistfully, but she did not beg Florian to let her say good bye. At the foot of the stairs she withdrew her hand from Florian's arm, and clung to the balustrade with trembling fingers. And here she made another and last attempt to induce her friend to forsake her and her forlorn fortune.

"Florian," she said, "leave me here; do not ask me to go to your home. I will call a fiacre, and seek a refuge somewhere. Mrs Gunning has been kind to me; perhaps she may help me now."

"My dear," said Florian, and her voice trembled strangely, "you cannot go to Mrs. Gunning, for reasons I will tell you to-morrow. Now let me put this shawl completely over your head and face, for the night air is sharp. There, I will not hear another word; now I am going to carry you across the court to the carriage."

Olive could not expostulate, for the thick shawl was completely around her; but the stout arms that took her up so gently were not Florian's; and as she felt herself borne along in that kind, firm clasp, the strength that had hitherto sustained her gave way to the pressure of her weakness, and she fell back insensible. Then the tall figure, that at a signal from Florian's hand had come to her so silently from the dark courtway, paused a moment, saying hurriedly, "Miss Langley, I fear she has fainted; but perhaps it is better so. How shall I thank you for this kindness?"

"I need no thanks," replied Florian, in the same trembling voice.

"Poor child?" murmured the young man, "she is so light in my arms; she is worn to a shadow. Oh, Miss Langley, the duty I have to fulfill is a cruel one. In tracking a murderer's steps, and bringing him to justice, I shall kill this little frail creature, who has already almost given her life for his. And she will think it so hard, that I cause her sacrifice, her devotion, her sufferings in vain."

"It cannot be helped," returned Florian, gently; "you must still do your duty."

There was no time for further words; they had reached the carriage, and Olive being placed gently on the seat, Charles Vigo aided Florian to enter. Her hand was hot and trembling, and he could not but perceive that her whole air was fevered, restless, and frightened.

"Miss Langley, you have bound me to you in gratitude forever," he said eagerly. "How can I ever thank you for your courage this night?—how thank you for the many times you have cheered me when my impatience and pain was past hope?"

"I need no thanks," replied Florian faintly as she knelt down by Olive's side, and supported her head on her shoulder. "Opal, are you better?"

But Olive opened her weary eyes only to close them again. Charles Vigo, leaning forward, caught a glimpse, by the light of the lamp, of her wan and changed face, and covering his own with his hands, he groaned aloud. "What shall I do?" he murmured. "If I seize this man, I strike her a death blow; if I spare him, I let her bear his brand forever."

Olive heard his voice.

"Charles," she cried, stretching out her hand feebly. "Ah! I might have guessed when kindness or succor came to me, it was your hand sent it."

"Not all my hand, this time, Olive," he said, holding her thin fingers in his, and leaning over her. "Florian has been my guardian angel, Olive, and I have sinned against her in my ignorance. Olive, I have sinned against you in my ignorance. Can you forgive me?"

"Never mind that now," she replied, "what right had I to let you sacrifice yourself for me?"

"You have every right to all I possess on earth, Olive," said Charles Vigo. "You are my affianced wife, and I claim it as my due to protect you."

"I acknowledge all your claim, Charles," she said. "It is you I obey now. I go whithersoever you take me; and I only make one request of you in return—tell me what you have been doing in England since you put me into the carriage, in that lone line between Trowavas and the sea."

"Olive," he said, glancing uneasily at Florian, "have I ever asked you a question. Have I ever prayed you to turn against the roof that sheltered you; or bear witness against those you love? You chose a terrible path, on which you thought it your duty to walk; and I endured silently to see you take it. Do the same for me, Olive—endure to see me do my duty, and do not visit me for it with your anger or your hate."

Olive clasped her hands together, and fell forward on Charles Vigo's arm. He felt her trembling weakness; and if ever he relented in his purpose, he relented now, when he reflected what this feeble girl had done and suffered, and that his act was about to make all her sufferings vain.

"What shall I say?" murmured Olive, as she wetted Charles Vigo's hand with tears. "If I ask you mercy, you will not give it. And yet I have a hope. It was only I——"

"Hush, I entreat you, Olive!" exclaimed the young man, eagerly. "I will hear nothing, know nothing through you."

Olive was silent—there was a hope in her heart, for she knew nothing of the man Skews, and little guessed what he could tell.

In that momentary silence the carriage drew up at the door of the house in which Mrs. Langley's apartments were; and as Charles Vigo wrapped the large gray shawl around Olive's tiny form, she bent forward, and whispered in his ear, "Charles, there is one secret you do not know—John Trowavas is mad!"

Charles Vigo started, and turned pale as death. That one little word, "mad," altered everything. Should he indeed show mercy, or should he go on to the end? One glance at Olive's wasted figure and wan face decided him. Mad, or not mad, justice should be done to her. He took Olive in his arms, and carried her into the vestibule, where Florian already awaited her.

"Good-bye, Miss Langley," he said, as he took her hand. "In some happier time, I shall hope to thank you better for your noble friendship to Olive Varcoe. Now I can only say, that I intrust her to your care, knowing I leave her to the kindest hands and truest heart that ever beat."

"Farewell, Mr. Vigo;" replied Florian, in a faltering voice. "Rest assured that I will follow your instructions to the letter. I am glad that I can prove my friendship by more than words. I am proud that I am thought worthy of your esteem and of Olive's love."

Her lips trembled, and her hand, that he relinquished, fell droopingly by her side. Leaning on her shoulder for very weakness, Olive listened in silence till Charles Vigo came towards her to say farewell.

"You are going to England—to Cornwall?" she said, eagerly.

"I should have gone long ago, Olive, only I could not leave Paris till I had found you," he replied; "I could not go, knowing you were in this great city, alone, and in sorrow."

"And you will not make me wish that you had not found me—not succored me?" she pleaded, as she laid her hand upon her arm. "Remember what I have told you."

"I will remember," he said.

As he spoke Charles Vigo dropped her hand and looked at her wistfully. He would fain have taken her in his arms and kissed her, but the dead white stillness of her face, the wanness of her eyes, repelled him.

"Farewell, Olive," he said sadly; then he closed the door softly, and was gone.

CHAPTER XXVI.

There throw out the glossy blackness of her hair, and the deathly paleness of the small face once so flushing, once so radiant with the color of the damask rose; but, changed as she was, here still were those wondrous dark eyes, filled with a holier and far softer light than in the days of their pride and passion, and the long black lashes seemed longer now, when they rested on a cheek of marble.

As she sat she fell asleep, as Florian read to her, and her sleep was feverish, for soon a burning spot of crimson glowed upon each cheek, bringing upon her face an unearthly, painful beauty. Florian softly wrapped a shawl about her, and watched till her rest grew peaceful; then she crept away, and closing the door gently, went to her mother's room.

Olive's sorrows had been many, and in the visions of her sleep old griefs rose up around her. She was the wilful child again at Trowavas, passionately sad or passionately gay, now gathering flowers or playing with sea-shells, now bewailing in bitter loneliness her orphan age, and the sights that set her hot Eastern blood on fire. In these sorrows how often John had comforted her; and in sleep Olive heard his voice, and saw his face, with that strange meek look upon it, which she, and she only had sometimes seen change to fierceness. Then come troubled thoughts, and half-waking, she started, as there rose up before her dreaming eyes the long green vistas of the wood, with summer shadows lying stilly over the limpid pool by the Lady's Bower. Then, lying down her head again, sleep grew more serene, and she dreamed that all the past was but a dream—this terrible vision of death, of exile, of crime and anguish, a dream—and she, back again at Trowavas, was marvelling why so dreadful a grief had visited her slumber.

The joy of this dream was intense. Heaviness was gone; brightness, peace, and a relief past expression, lifted her spirit above the earth as on an angel's wing. Then it seemed to her that she was down upon the sands, with the soft murmuring flow of the waves rippling at her feet, and here she was telling Sir Hilton this dreadful dream of murder; and he smiled as he listened, and said her dream was a folly, for circumstances black as ebony would never make him deem her guilty. He had never loved but her; and for John, did she not know he would soon be Eleanor's bridegroom? Then she fell upon his neck, and cried, "It is only a dream—only a dream. Oh, Hilton, Hilton!"

Now Florian had desired her maid to admit Sir Hilton Trowavas to her presence the instant he arrived; so, while Olive slept, the door was softly opened, and the girl, in whispering accents, announced his name.

"I beg pardon, sir," said the maid, "Miss Vansittart has been very ill. She is sleeping. I will go and tell Miss Langley that you are here."

She closed the door, and Sir Hilton was left alone with the sleeper. Almost hidden in the folds of the scarlet shawl, he had not noticed the tiny form till the servant named her; then he turned, and, with all his blood rushing to his heart, he gazed on Olive's face. Her dream made it happy as an angel's, and she smiled as he looked on her.

"How can she look so peaceful?" he said to himself bitterly.

Then, as his troubled eye took in more accurately the aspect of her face, he saw the change, the fever spot upon the cheek, the worn and pallid look of the faultless features, the emaciation of the once rounded form, the pitiful whiteness of the small clasped hands. She had been ill—she had suffered—perhaps she was dying. He made one step towards her, and at that instant she stretched out her hand in sleep, and murmured, "Hilton! Hilton!"

"Olive!" he cried, "Olive, I am here."

For a moment, at the sight of her suffering, at the sound of her voice, he forgot all, except the love that he had so long deemed ignoble. But as she started up, and her large dark eyes in wild affright met his, he drew back and mastered his emotion.

"I am sorry, Miss Vansittart, if I have disturbed you," he said.

"You have suffered much," he said softly.

Olive made him no answer, she knew he could not measure her sufferings, but she could not help the tears that started to her closed eyes, and welled from their long lashes over her pale cheeks.

"Olive," he continued—and his face was scarcely less white than hers as he spoke—"Olive, in all human probability this is the last, and only time, we shall ever speak face to face, and alone. For like a great gulf, a crime stands between me and you for all time, and we part now for ever; but if it will comfort you to know that I repent my hardness of heart and worldliness—above all, that I repent the blindness and cowardice that made me fling away my love for you as a toy, that had amused my boyhood—then know, Olive, that I acknowledge it as the great mistake and sin of my life. And remember I take my full share of the sin of Eleanor's death, and therefore I can think of it mercifully and pitifully."

"Oh, thank Heaven you say that!" cried Olive, clasping her hands. "Thank Heaven!"

"And I can freely forgive her murderer," continued Sir Hilton in a low voice.

"Remember your words," exclaimed Olive, suddenly falling on her knees, and holding her hands up towards him. "Oh remember your words when you are called upon to forgive! Do not harden your heart then, and deny both your share in the sin and your pardon of it."

"I will deny neither," replied Sir Hilton, much agitated by her vehemence. "Olive, let me think that I have made you happier by saying this."

"Happier!" she said, as she wiped the streaming tears from her eyes, and a smile broke over her face; "yes, you have indeed made me happier. I think now, I can bear the worst pain of all."

"What worst pain?" asked Sir Hilton, glancing around, half in terror. He thought she meant a prison and death.

"The pain of knowing I have suffered all this in vain," replied Olive, pressing her hand upon her quivering lips to still the trembling, and looking at him in such strange grief, that he could hardly restrain his own tears.

"Not in vain, Olive," he said eagerly. "Surely all suffering cleanses the heart. I have confessed to you that I am sorry, that I have repented; give me the same consolation; tell me that this change, this gentleness I see in you, are fruits of deep repentance for the past. And though the world never forgives, though human justice punishes and degrades, I will forgive. This hasty sin, this mad crime shall not—"

"Yes, yes, this mad crime," repeated Olive eagerly.

"Shall not separate the sinner from my pity, my mercy, and my love," he continued.

"Thank God you say such words as these!" she cried. "Oh, how shall I thank him for the goodness, and the love, that have worked this miracle in your once proud spirit! Remember, it is a solemn promise you have made. You will forgive, though the world never forgives; you will show mercy, though the hand of justice deals degrading death."

Sir Hilton Trowavas felt his flesh shudder at her words, and for a moment he covered his eyes, to shut out the sight of her pale, imploring face, tear-stained, which looked up at him in an agony of prayer.

"If that awful and dreadful time should come," he said, in a whisper, "I will still keep my promise; but I pray that God may spare us, and avert that day; tell me rather of the change I see in yourself."

"Change!" said Olive, stretching out her small, wasted hands, with a feverish action of impatience; then she let them fall on her lap, saying, more gently, "you mean a change in spirit. You ask if I am sorry for the past. No one has such a right to ask me that as a Trowavas. Yes, I am sorry, with a great, an exceeding sorrow. I have gone in bitterness, and mourned as one without hope. In days of desolation, in hours of sickness, loneliness, and pain, all my sins have come, and cried against me, with a voice that could be heard. My anger and jealousy, my im-

OLIVE VARCOE
—OR—
TRUE TO THE LAST.
CHAPTER XXV. (Continued).
So they came and went, these flitting visions, while the fire died into darkness, and the lamp burned dim; and Olive's weary head drooped at last in sleep, with tears still staining the wan cheeks, and glistening on the long dark lashes. So when there came to her door the tap of a gentle hand, she heard it not; and when a quiet figure, stealing in, stood by her side, and looked down upon her white worn face, she saw it not, nor dreamed whose tears fell, pitying here.
"Opal! Opal!" whispered Florian, as she softly took one of her little wan hands, and kissed it. "Opal, awake! I am here to help you, Opal."
Then the large fevered eyes opened slowly, and gazed in terror on the sobbing figure by her side.
"Florian, why are you here?" said Olive with a sudden start. "You must not be seen with me—you must not speak to me. Go away, I entreat you! My name is not Opal. I am Olive Varcoe. There, now you will leave me, I know."
Suddenly Olive snatched her hand from Florian's grasp, and waited to see her turn away in horror.
"Always Opal to me," said Florian, with arms closely clinging round the wasted figure of her friend, "Always dear Opal to me! Olive Varcoe is too noble, too good, too great; I should not dare to kiss her; but Opal I can love."
Ah, then tears burst forth indeed, and Olive's wasted arms fell about her neck, as, in her weakness, she drooped forward on Florian's shoulder.
"Then you do not hate me? and you forgive me for having deceived you?" she said. "I have never deceived another," she added. "I have never dared to place myself in another home since I left yours."
"And now you must come to mine again," said Florian, "and at once. There is not a moment to be lost."
Olive raised her eyes to gaze at her friend with wonder, and to shake her head in sorrowful refusal.
"But you must," persisted Florian, "indeed you must, Opal; unless you have strength to bear the excitement of an arrest—unless you have courage at last to speak the truth."
Olive's dead white face grew whiter, and her eyes, glazed with sudden terror fixed themselves on Florian in mute agony.

I think—I fear—I am too weak to suffer much more."
Her trembling hands, her quivering lips, her wan face, cruelly attested the truth of this; yet her determination still to screen, if she could, the Trewavas name from infamy, was as strong as ever.
Florian looked on her with tearful eyes, and a color gradually deepening on her cheeks.
"Olive," said she, "whether you be right or wrong, I cannot say; but I know there is one man who will not permit you to slay yourself—one friend who will snatch this fearful task from your hands. He has been gathering evidence; he can prove now what he only suspected, when he permitted you to go forth a wanderer. And to-morrow, if you are arrested, he will go to the police, and lay that evidence before them.
With haggard eyes, Olive seized on

Olive could not expostulate, for the thick shawl was completely around her; but the stout arms that took her up so gently were not Florian's; and as she felt herself borne along in that kind, firm clasp, the strength that had hitherto sustained her gave way to the pressure of her weakness, and she fell back insensible. Olive heard his voice.
"Charles," she cried, stretching out her hand feebly. "Ah! I might have guessed when kindness or succor came to me, it was your hand sent it."
"Not all my hand, this time, Olive," he said, holding her thin fingers in his, and leaning over her. "Florian has been a generous, a true, a devoted friend. Without her, I should never have found you."
As he praised her, as he uttered her name, Olive felt Florian's hand tremble and the bounding throb of her heart you; and if there be anything among your valuables that you wish particularly to have, it shall be with you to-morrow."

Olive smiled feebly. It seemed to her, then, that she wished for nothing, she cared for nothing, but to lie down in peace and die. Without further questions she put her hand on Florian's arm, she sided her weak steps, and led her out on the great staircase. In that large house, with its ten stories, there were many tenants; and some of them were still up, but none made a remark as the two girls crept silently down stairs. In passing the good laundress's door, Olive looked at it a moment wistfully, but she did not beg Florian to let her say good-bye. At the foot of the stairs she withdrew her hand from Florian's arm, and clung to the balustrade with trembling fingers. And here she made another and last attempt to induce her friend to forsake her and her forlorn fortunes.
"Florian," she said, "leave me here; do not ask me to go to your home. I will call a fiacre, and seek a refuge somewhere. Mrs Gunning has been kind to me; perhaps she may help me now."
"My dear," said Florian, and her voice trembled strangely, "you cannot go to Mrs. Gunning, for reasons I will tell you to-morrow. Now let me put this shawl completely over your head and face, for the night air is sharp. There, I will not hear another word; now I am going to carry you across the court to the carriage."

of earth, Olive," said Charles Vigo. "You are my affianced wife, and I claim it as my due to protect you."
"I acknowledge all your claims, Charles," she said. "It is you I obey now. I go whitheraever you take me; and I only make one request of you in return—tell me what you have been doing in England since you put me into the carriage, in that lone line between Trewavas and the sea."
"Olive," he said, glancing uneasily at Florian, "have I ever asked you a question. Have I ever prayed you to turn against the roof that sheltered you, or bear witness against those you love? You chose a terrible path, on which you thought it your duty to walk; and I endured silently to see you take it. Do the same for me, Olive—endure to see me do my duty, and do not visit me for it with your anger or your hate."
Olive clasped her hands together, and fell forward on Charles Vigo's arm. He felt her trembling weakness; and if ever he relented in his purpose, he relented now, when he reflected what this feeble girl had done and suffered, and that his act was about to make all her sufferings vain.
"What shall I say?" murmured Olive, as she wetted Charles Vigo's hand with tears. "If I ask your mercy, you will not give it. And yet I have a hope. It was only I——"
"Hush, I entreat you, Olive!" exclaimed the young man, eagerly. "I will hear nothing, know nothing through you."
Olive was silent—there was a hope in her heart, for she knew nothing of the man Skews, and little guessed what he could tell.
In that momentary silence the carriage drew up at the door of the house in which Mrs. Langley's apartments were; and as Charles Vigo wrapped the large grey shawl around Olive's tiny form, she bent forward, and whispered in his ear, "Charles, there is one secret you do not know—John Trewavas is mad!"
Charles Vigo started, and turned pale as death. That one little word, "mad," altered everything. Should he indeed show mercy, or should he go on to the end? One glance at Olive's wasted figure and wan face decided him. Mad, or not mad, justice should be done to her. He took Olive in his arms, and carried her into the vestibule, where Florian already awaited her.
"Good-bye, Miss Langley," he said, as he took her hand. "In some happier time, I shall hope to thank you better for your noble friendship to Olive Varcoe. Now I can only say, that I intrust her to your care, knowing I leave her to the kindest hands and truest heart that ever beat."
"Farewell, Mr. Vigo;" replied Florian, in a faltering voice. "Rest assured that I will follow your instructions to the letter. I am glad that I can prove my friendship by more than words. I am proud that I am thought worthy of your esteem and of Olive's love."
Her lips trembled, and her hand, that he relinquished, fell droopingly by her side. Leaning on her shoulder for very weakness, Olive listened in silence till Charles Vigo came towards her to say farewell.
"You are going to England—to Cornwall?" she said, eagerly.
"I should have gone long ago, Olive, only I could not leave Paris till I had found you," he replied; "I could not go, knowing you were in this great city, alone, and in sorrow."
"And you will not make me wish that you had not found me—not succored me?" she pleaded, as she laid her hand upon her arm. "Remember what I have told you."
"I will remember," he said.
As he spoke Charles Vigo dropped her hand and looked at her wistfully. He would fain have taken her in his arms and kissed her, but the dead white stillness of her face, the wanness of her spent, repelled him.
"Farewell, Olive," he said sadly; then he closed the door softly, and was gone.

CHAPTER XXVI.
On the second floor of Mrs. Langley's apartments was a little sitting-room, called Florian's own, and here she and Olive sat together. Mrs. Langley never mounted these stairs; her blindness were those wondrous dark eyes, filled with a holier and far softer light than in the days of their pride and passion, and the long black lashes seemed longer now, when they rested on a cheek of marble.

As she sat she fell asleep, as Florian read to her, and her sleep was feverish, for soon a burning spot of crimson glowed upon each cheek, bringing upon her face an unearthly, painful beauty. Florian softly wrapped a shawl about her, and watched till her rest grew peaceful; then she crept away, and closing the door gently, went to her mother's room.
Olive's sorrows had been many, and in the visions of her sleep old griefs rose up around her. She was the willful child again at Trewavas, passionately sad or passionately gay, now gathering flowers or playing with sea-shells, now bewailing in bitter loneliness her orphanage, and the sights that set her hot Eastern blood on fire. In these sorrows how often John had comforted her; and in sleep Olive heard his voice, and saw his face, with that strange meek look upon it, which she, and she only had sometimes seen change to fierceness. Then came troubled thoughts, and half-waking, she started, as there rose up before her dreaming eyes the long green vistas of the wood, with summer shadows lying stilly over the limpid pool by the Lady's Bower. Then, lying down her head again, sleep grew more serene, and she dreamed that all the past was but a a dream—this terrible vision of death, of exile, of crime and anguish, a dream—and she, back again at Trewavas, was marvelling why so dreadful a grief had visited her slumber.
The joy of this dream was intense. Heaviness was gone; brightness, peace, and a relief past expression, lifted her spirit above the earth as on an angel's wing. Then it seemed to her that she was down upon the sands, with the soft murmuring flow of the waves ripling at her feet, and here she was telling Sir Hilton this dreadful dream of murder; and he smiled as he listened, and said her dream was a folly, for circumstances black as ebony would never make him deem her guilty. He had never loved but her; and for John, did she not know he would soon be Eleanor's bridegroom? Then she fell upon his neck, and cried, "It is only a dream—only a dream. Oh, Hilton, Hilton!"
Now Florian had desired her maid to admit Sir Hilton Trewavas to her presence the instant he arrived; so, while Olive slept, the door was softly opened, and the girl, in whispering accents, announced his name.
"I beg pardon, sir," said the maid, "Miss Vansittart has been very ill. She is sleeping. I will go and tell Miss Langley that you are here."
She closed the door, and Sir Hilton was left alone with the sleeper. Almost hidden in the folds of the scarlet shawl, he had not noticed the tiny form till the servant named her; then he turned, and, with all his blood rushing to his heart, he gazed on Olive's face. Her dream made it happy as an angel's, and she smiled as he looked on her.
"How can she look so peaceful?" he said to himself bitterly.
Then, as his troubled eye took in more accurately the aspect of her face, he saw the change, the fever spot upon the cheek, the worn and pallid look of the faultless features, the emaciation of the once rounded form, the pitiful whiteness of the small clasped hands. She had been ill—she had suffered—perhaps she was dying. He made one step towards her, and at that instant she stretched out her hand in sleep, and murmured, "Hilton! Hilton!"
"Olive!" he cried, "Olive, I am here."
For a moment, at the sight of her suffering, at the sound of her voice, he forget all, except the love that he had so long deemed ignoble. But as she started up, and her large dark eyes in wild affright met his, he drew back and mastered his emotion.
"I am sorry, Miss Vansittart, if I have disturbed you," he said.
Olive knew what his words meant; "Save yourself if you can; I will not betray your disguise."
She arose trembling, and letting the scarlet Cashmere fall from her tiny figure, she said, mournfully, "There is could not help the tears that started to her closed eyes, and welled from their long lashes over her pale cheeks.

"Olive," he continued—and his face was scarcely less white than hers as he spoke—"Olive, in all human probability this is the last, and only time, we shall ever speak face to face, and alone. For like a great gulf, a crime stands between me and you for all time, and we part now for ever; but if it will comfort you to know that I repent my hardness of heart and worldliness—above all, that I repent the blindness and cowardice that made me fling away my love for you as a toy, that had amused my boyhood—then know, Olive, that I acknowledge it as the great mistake and sin of my life. And remember I take my full share of the sin of Eleanor's death, and therefore I can think of it mercifully and pitifully."
"Oh, thank Heaven you say that!" cried Olive, clasping her hands. "Thank Heaven!"
"And I can freely forgive her murderer," continued Sir Hilton in a low voice.
"Remember your words," exclaimed Olive, suddenly falling on her knees, and holding her hands up towards him. "Oh remember your words when you are called upon to forgive! Do not harden your heart then, and deny both your share in the sin and your pardon of it."
"I will deny neither," replied Sir Hilton, much agitated by her vehemence. "Olive, let me think that I have made you happier by saying this."
"Happier!" she said, as she wiped the streaming tears from her eyes, and a smile broke over her face; "yes, you have indeed made me happier. I think now, I can bear the worst pain of all."
"What worst pain?" asked Sir Hilton, glancing around, half in terror. He thought she meant a prison and death.
"The pain of knowing I have suffered all this in vain," replied Olive, pressing her hand upon her quivering lips to still the trembling, and looking at him in such strange grief, that he could hardly restrain his own tears.
"Not in vain, Olive," he said eagerly. "Surely all suffering cleanses the heart. I have confessed to you that I am sorry, that I have repented; give me the same consolation; tell me that this change, this gentleness I see in you, are fruits of deep repentance for the past. And though the world never forgives, though human justice punishes and degrades, I will forgive. This hasty sin, this mad crime shall not—"
"Yes, yes, this mad crime," repeated Olive eagerly.
"Shall not separate the sinner from my pity, my mercy, and my love," he continued.
"Thank God you say such words as these!" she cried. "Oh, how shall I thank him for the goodness, and the love, that have worked this miracle in your once proud spirit! Remember, it is a solemn promise you have made. You will forgive, though the world never forgives; you will show mercy, though the hand of justice deals a degrading death."
Sir Hilton Trewavas felt his flesh shudder at her words, and for a moment he covered his eyes, to shut out the sight of her pale, imploring face, tear-stained, which looked up at his in an agony of prayer.
"If that awful and dreadful time should come," he said, in a whisper, "I will still keep my promise; but I pray that God may spare us, and avert that day; tell me rather of the change I see in yourself."
"Change!" said Olive, stretching out her small, wasted hands, with a feverish action of impatience; then she let them fall on her lap, saying, more gently, "you mean a change in spirit. You ask if I am sorry for the past. No one has such a right to ask me that as a Trewavas. Yes, I am sorry, with a great, an exceeding sorrow. I have gone in bitterness, and mourned as one without hope. In days of desolation, in hours of sickness, loneliness, and pain, all my sins have come, and cried against me, with a voice that could be heard. My anger and jealousy, my impatience and passion, my hasty, vindictive words, all have risen up against me, and judged me. And I grieve, too, for the cruelty of my angry thoughts,

IT SHINES FOR ALL.

ORANGEVILLE, DEC. 24, 1891.

GREEN VS. GILLESPIE.

THE contest for the deputy-reeveship of this town promises to be one of the most interesting municipal battles that has been fought for some time, that is providing no other candidates enter the field. Messrs Marshall Green and Harry Gillespie, both of whom represent the West ward in the council, have announced their intention of contesting the deputy-reeveship, and it is probable no other aspirants will join the fray. They are both young men and have resided in Orangeville for many years, and, therefore, the result will be watched with interest. This journal does not generally support a candidate until the people say who they propose to put in the field, and their decision will not be known until Monday evening. Therefore, we will remain an interested spectator until nomination night.

BOODLE THE SECRET OF POWER.

Slowly but surely the courts are stripping unrestricted reciprocity of its influence. That great issue was credited with changing the political complexion of Welland county. It has been legally proven that boodle was more potential than reciprocity in the contest last March, and William Manly German is the first of the members elected to this Parliament who is injudicious enough to personally flaunt currency in the face of a free and independent elector.

At least he is the first statesman to be caught in the act. Others may not be more virtuous but they were more careful. Absence of proof is as serviceable as innocence and for lack of that Mr. German is undone.

There is no cause for rejoicing in the downfall of a fellow countryman especially when he loses at once his seat in Parliament and his citizenship. Mr. German defeated a far better Canadian than himself. John Ferguson of Welland was a patriotic politician, and if he fills the vacancy created by the reverses of Mr German the country will be the easier by the change.—Toronto Telegram

ELECTION TALK.

THE mayoralty aspirants are as silent as the grave, and the short sighted elector is liable to labor under the delusion that nobody wants the office. The "suspects" are saying nothing, but they are sawing wood, nevertheless.

PRESSURE is being brought to bear on Mr. James Parks to allow his name to go before the electors of Mono as a candidate for the council, and it is also rather likely he will accede to the wishes of his friends.

WE are informed on reliable authority that Mr. Elijah Hamilton of Amaranth will not seek re-election as councillor nor will he offer himself for a larger municipal office. This was heard from one of Mr. Hamilton's friends, but it is impossible to say what shape municipal matters will assume until nomination day.

THERE promises to be an exciting time in East Garafraxa this year over the reeveship, and it is expected that Reeve Hamilton and Deputy-reeve Simpson will be the contestants for that office. Both these gentlemen make splendid representatives and the municipality cannot well afford to lose either of their services.

THE name of Andrew Hughson is the latest mentioned in connection with municipal affairs in East Garafraxa. The people on the Orangeville side say it is about time they had a representative who is one of themselves, and will work hard to secure their candidate's election. Should Mr. Hughson decide to offer himself he would stand a good chance of being elected.

A NUMBER of Mr. Wm. McCluskey's friends are inducing him to be a candidate for the Mono council next year, but he has not fully made up his mind to enter the field. Mr. McCluskey, should he decide to let his name go before the electors, would almost be certain of being returned to the council. He would make a wise and honest official, and his supporters seem determined to bring him out.

UP in East Garafraxa the political pot is boiling up in great shape and before many days it will boil over. Reeve Hamilton and Deputy-reeve Simpson are in a good race for the reeve's chair, and Councillor John Turner aspires to the deputy reeveship. Mr. D. Carroll and Mr. T. Carroll will seek re-election. It is rumored that Messrs. John Wilson, Jas. McKee and Malcom Smith are looking towards the council. There will be live timely up there in January.

AMONG the Orangeville councillors who will not seek re-election are Mr. Geo. Cobean of the East and W. Fiddis of the South wards. Mr. Cobean wishes us to thank the electors for their kind treatment of him during his three year term as their representative. Mr. C. has been an honest, straight forward gentleman and we are sorry that he has decided to abandon municipal life. Mr. Fiddis has occupied a seat at the council only one term, but he has been a very useful member and the South ward will sustain a severe loss if he carries out his present intentions.

IT seems that there are a few ratepayers in Amaranth who are trying to bring out a candidate to oppose Deputy-reeve Johnston, who is aspiring for the reeveship, in the coming elections, but THE SUN thinks, and we believe the majority of the electors of that township think so too, that Mr. Johnston is the man who will steer the ship of state through the municipal sea next year. If Mr. Johnston did not possess the necessary qualifications we would be the last to espouse his cause. His conduct at the council board during the past several years should be a sufficient guarantee of his ability to deal with township matters, and the ratepayers will no doubt recognize this fact.

ALDERMEN'S AGENT!

Last Meeting of the Orangeville Legislature for 1891.

THE CURTAIN RUNG DOWN!

Ald. McKitrick's Anti-Sleighriding By-law Winds up the Business.

The last meeting of the town council took place on Monday evening, the full number of aldermen being present. The old council always meet on election night, but the members who intend to retire and those who are defeated at the polls seldom put in an appearance. Therefore of a great town who took part in the great wind-up were: Mayor Walsh, Reeve Lindsay, Deputy-reeve Sudcott, Ald. Youmans, Ketchum, Green, Gillespie, Cobean, McKitrick and Fiddis. There or four citizens who were anxious to kill time for half-an-hour occupied seats in the auditorium.

The mayor read a communication from W. J. L. McKay regarding the assessment of Wm. Martin, who had been occupying a house on east Broadway belonging to a Toronto man. He moved out shortly after the assessors called, but he was on for the taxes. The Assessment committee will adjust matters.

Caretaker Frenlis reported that 21 lots at $7.50 each and a number at $5 a piece had been sold during the year. Some of the money, however, still remains unpaid.

Up till Monday last $10,000.50 had been paid to the town treasurer in taxes.

The following

were read, some being ordered paid and others being referred to the various committees; D. S. Brown, $25; C. P. R., 50cts; Jas. Pickering, $1; R. Allen, 75cts.; Post, $7 05; W. Duffy, 50cts.; Advertiser, $2.60; A. Turner, $1.25.

Mr. Lindsay read the Finance committee's report, which dealt with an account of A. A. Hughson amounting to $65.50. The committee recommended the payment of $50. The report was adopted.

The report of the Assessment committee, which was read by Mr. Green, advised a rebate of taxes to R. Beatty and T. E. Emery, $4 to the former and $3 to the latter, on East Broadway property which was destroyed by fire during the summer.

STOPPING THE KIDS' FUN.

Ald. McKitrick's by law to prohibit children riding on the platform of cars, hanging on sleighs, coasting and skating on the streets came up again for discussion, and our worthy representatives spent a long time in expressing their views on the question. Mr. McKitrick desired to amend a clause in the by-law to allow the children to sleigh ride on any street except Broadway, First, Second and Mill streets. Ald. Ketchum talked hard to have Second street left out, but Ald. Youmans said if that was done the snow would not be cleaned off the sidewalk and the snow by-law would be violated. The mayor opined that no change should be made, and his opinion was acted upon by the council. Of course it is not the intention to keep the children from sleigh-riding on every street, but the chief-of-police will use his own discretion in deciding which thoroughfares children will have to give a wide berth. The by-law was read a third time and passed.

A TROUBLESOME STREAM.

Ald. Ketchum brought down a report from the B. & B. committee. Hugh Haley had complained that the stream running through his property had damaged it to some extent and wanted the matter attended to. The committee asked permission to settle the claim for a sum not exceeding $45. Ald. Youmans thought a full report should be presented, and Ald. McKitrick was of the same opinion. The latter said too much of that work was left to committees and the council should divide it. Mr. Ketchum said he was quite satisfied that the council should attend to it and he withdrew his motion.

The time for returning the collector's roll was further extended until the 5th of next January.

Nothing more came up to occupy the councillors' attention and the meeting was declared adjourned. Some of the people's representatives departed to come back no more; others hung about the enchanted chamber to speculate on the result of the elections. There will be another meeting of the old council on election night, but those who voluntarily retire and those who are told by the silent speaker to stay at home will not attend the conclave. And thus old Father Time makes his annual visit and laughs long and loud at the candidates who are not in it!

VANATTER.

FARM SOLD.—Mr. A. Redmond has purchased from Mr. E. Hawes his farm of 100 acres, lot 8, con. 11. The price paid we understand was $5000.

SICK.—We are very sorry to state that Mrs. W. H. Hunter is seriously ill at present, but we hope soon to be able to announce her recovery.

VISITING.—Mr. E. J. Cook has gone on an extended visit to his brother at Gould city, Mich. Jean will be a regular Yank when he comes back.

MOVED TO TOWN.—Mr. D. J. Hunter, son of W. H. Hunter, Esq., has left our midst and has gone to reside at Orangeville. We understand Dave has secured the position of head traveller for the McMaster M'f'g Co. of your town, and he will undoubtedly do credit to the office. We are sorry to lose such an estimable citizen as Mr. Hunter, but we hope his removal from here will be more beneficial to him.

WILL RUN AGAIN.—Mr. David Carroll, our present councillor, will offer himself again for the position which he has occupied for the past year, and he is sure to be returned again. Mr. Carroll has made a wise and careful councillor and we could not do better than send him back for another year. It is unlikely he will have any opposition at this end of the township.

THE CHAMPION.—East Garafraxa feels pretty proud since last Thursday, and we have every reason to congratulate Miss Maggie Carroll for winning a valuable set of dishes in the butter competition at the Orangeville market. Miss Carroll is a butter maker second to none in the county, as Thursday's competition will show. Your correspondent desires to congratulate Miss Carroll on her victory over the butter makers of the country.

MONO CENTRE.

BRIEFS.—The council met here last Tuesday.....The treasurer's statement for this township has been issued..... Our blacksmith has been doing a rushing trade lately and we wish him continued success.

AT TORONTO.—Mr. Andrew Henry, clerk of Mono township, was summoned to Toronto last week owing to the serious illness of his brother, Alex. Henry, formerly of Caledon. His brother was suffering from erysipelas, but is now recovering. Mr. Henry returned home on Friday.

FROM DAKOTA.—Mr. W. W. Lundy, son of our respected resident, Mr. John Lundy, arrived here this week from Bottineau, North Dakota, where he has resided for the past four years. He has many friends around here who are pleased to see him in their midst again.

The Coroner's Jury Censures a Very Little Popular—Sad Christmas at Their Home.

A terrible accident took place at the G. P. R. crossing on west Broadway shortly after three o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Robert H. Keyes and wife were driving to their home, a lot above Amaranth station, and had not got outside of town limits when poor Mrs. Keyes was ushered into eternity. They were driving at a slow trot in a single buggy and the thought of death or even an accident was farthest from their minds. When nearing the crossing, however, a heavy freight train was climbing the steep grade and it took two engines to handle the train. This crossing, which is known as the slow crossing, is one of the most dangerous on the line, and too wonder is that more accidents do not occur at this point. The train arrived at the crossing a second or two before Mr. Keyes' rig and the horse became unmanageable and dashed along beside the train. The unequal race was brought to a sudden and fatal close by the wire fence forcing the horse on the track and the and smashed it into a thousand pieces. The occupants were thrown out and when Mrs. Keyes was picked up it was found that the vital spark had fled. Her neck was broken, but no other injuries were discovered on the body. Mr. Keyes, strange to say, although tossed clear by his wife, escaped almost without a scratch. The body of the dead lady was carried to the residence of Mr. Alex. Conley, about fifty yards from the scene of the accident, and a messenger despatched after a doctor. When the latter arrived his services were not required, as the lady was past all earthly help.

Deceased was a sister of Mr. George Bennett of Leaside, ex-deputy-reeve of Amaranth. The funeral will take place from her late residence at Amaranth station to-morrow, Christmas.

RAILWAY EXPLOITS EXPLAINED.

Coroner Henry summoned a jury and commenced holding an inquest the evening the accident occurred. The jury were: J. S. Leighton (foreman), J. W. Neil, E. McLean, J. C. Reid, R. Readonis, T. Campbell, A. Smith, J. Robb, J. E. Booth, J. A. Felstead, D. C. Lamont, M. J. Sproul, F. Ritchie. The jurymen were driven to the residence of Mr. Conley for the purpose of viewing the remains of the late Mrs. Keyes. An adjournment was then made to the council chamber where the evidence of several witnesses was taken. John Hamilton of Waldemar testified that he was near the spot when the accident occurred. He saw the horses running beside the train, and remarked to his wife that the whistle did not blow. Witness assisted getting the horse on its feet, and Mrs. Keyes was lying doubled up in the fence corner.

Mrs. Hamilton did not see the mishap take place, but remembered her husband make the remark about the whistle not blowing. She was not sure whether he spoke of it before or after the accident.

Mr. Hamilton was recalled and swore he made the remark about the whistle not blowing before the accident took place.

Dr. Lewis was called and stated the extent of Mrs. Keyes' injuries. He considered the crossing a very dangerous one.

The inquest was then adjourned until last evening.

All the jurymen and a number of witnesses were present last night when the coroner commenced the inquiry into the cause of Mrs. Keyes' death. Wm. Upethegrove and Wm. Haley, engineer and fireman of the first engine, R. Keyes, husband of the victim, J. H. Hughes, T. H. Keyes, D. Cameron, W. Walker, H. Storry, J. Banks, W. White, J. Kearns, and Chas. Campin, engineer of the rear engine, were examined at some length. Engineer Upethegrove and Fireman Haley swore the whistle blew the regular crossing whistle, and it was impossible to avoid the accident.

THE VERDICT.

The jury deliberated and brought in the following verdict:

"That the said Mrs. Keyes came her death by an unavoidable accident at the G. P. R. crossing on west Broadway, Orangeville, and the railway hands are exonerated from all blame; but we would recommend that the trees and shrubs at or near the said crossing be cleared away and other changes made by said company to make the crossing in question safer for the travelling public."

CAMILLA.

ANOTHER CANDIDATE.—It is rumored around here that Mr. Wm. McCluskey will seek the suffrages of the electors at the coming elections for the council. If the rumor proves correct there will be exitloads of fun in this section, for with Laird and McCluskey in the field, who says there'll be no excitement. Keep coming, gentlemen, and we'll elect the best man.

IS SNELL THE MAN?—During the last few days, Mr. Editor, your reporter has heard a great deal of talk about the reeveship election, and as both Mr. Snell and Island have a great many supporters around Camilla the interest taken in this fight is on the increase. Mr. Snell seems to be gaining ground every day and his supporters are of the opinion that he will be elected by a majority of 150 or 200 votes. Mr. Island has made a good officer, and he filled the 1st deputy reeve's chair in a very satisfactory manner. A great deal of sympathy is felt for Mr. Snell on account of his standing by at the request of other men, and if he would keep on doing that he would never reach the reeve's chair. He has been after the position for a long time, but now he has to fight to get it. Elections in Mono are sometimes uncertain and this one may be of the latter class.

Who Can Dispute It?

Dear Sir,—Your Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills are the best selling pill in the market. This is a fact. I speak with knowledge on the subject, as I have been dealing in various kinds of Pills, and sell more of Morse's than any other.
If any one does not believe this, I ask him to write any of my customers about it, or better still, I ask him to try a box and see if he will then use any other. I hope I may always have them. Yours respectfully,

HOCKLEY.

THE REEVESHIP CONTEST.—Municipal matters in this vicinity are beginning to assume shape. Some of the candidates were present at the Releasey and Hockley concerts. During the past few days, public feeling is strongly asserting itself in favor of Mr. George Island for reeve. The frank and honest manner in which he speaks, when referring to municipal affairs, is gaining for him hosts of friends. Many are of the opinion that Mr. Snell is far too anxious for office, for failing to get Parliamentary honors, he is now anxious for one much lower. Mr. Island's speeches are characterized by sound sense, and a good knowledge of his subject. He has attended faithfully to township business since first elected, and now that a vacancy for further promotion exists, it certainly is his place to strive for it. Being posted in township affairs as they now exist, he will be better fitted to carry on township business than one who is not posted.

Wedding, Keeper and Gem Rings, large stock to select from, at Parr's.

BOWLING.—The Hockleyites will hold their monthly or Christmas night. They will be special and a good program prepared.....A new meeting will be given by the Andersville church, 4th line, near Terra Cotta station, on Christmas night.....Rev. W. E. Ramsay of Toronto has been engaged to take charge of the pastorate.....Mr. Jas. Maxwell has bought the east ½ of lot 23, con. 3, Mono. Unless something unexpected happens he will be paid $2,000.

GRAND ENTERTAINMENT.—The annual festival in connection with Knox church, Charlestown, will take place on the evening of New Year's day. An exceedingly good program has been provided and the following talent has been secured: Miss Alexander, the well-known vocalist of Toronto, will sing a number of solos, her father accompanying her on the guitar; Miss Nellie E. Harris of Peterboro' will render a number of her favorite pieces, Mrs. W. Andrews of Streetsville, the Canadian Jenny Lind, will also favor the audience with several selections, Mr. and Miss Turnbull of Orangeville and the choir will also take part. Addresses will be delivered by Rev. J. G. Madill, Toronto, Public School Inspector Embury, Brampton, and others. A delightful tea will be served in the basement of the church from 5 to 7:30 p. m. This will undoubtedly be one of the best entertainments of the season and a great crowd should attend.

The papers are filled with good advice about what to buy for Christmas. It isn't so much what to buy as where to get the money that is bothering a great many people.

Our spicy western contemporary, the London Free Press, has just issued a Christmas number that any office might be proud of. The typography, as usual, is of the highest order, and the whole sheet presents a beautiful appearance.

ANNIVERSARY.—The S. S. anniversary of the Baptist church was held in the church on Monday evening. Rev. F Tracy, B. A., addressed the audience and the contents of a Christmas tree was distributed among the scholars, each being made happy by a gift, and a pleasant evening was thus brought to a close.

DON'T FORGET TO CALL.—Call at J. M. Bennett's liquor store for Pure Cider, Brandies, Hennessy's Brandy in wood or glass, Burk's Irish, and Canadian Whiskies, (warranted pure and good). First class quality of Port and Sherry wines for medicinal purposes. Gilt Edge and Crystal ales in fine condition, quarts and pints.

... satisfactory condition and perfect harmony prevails.

CHRISTMAS HINTS.—Buy no more than you can afford. Entertain only within your means. Give no gift where you do not delight to. Shop no more than you have the strength for. Keep your Christmas nerve and muscle and heart and hope and cheer first for your own home, your own firside, your dearest, closest, and then for the lonelies, the friefless, the unloved, the "unlearned," and be true, true, true to the last Christmas card that goes to your post office, or the last "Merry Christmas" that crosses your lips!

AND NOW FOR BUSINESS.—The directors of the newly formed McMaster Manufacturing Co. held a meeting on Tuesday for the purpose of taking over the plant of the foundry and to elect officers. Everything was arranged satisfactorily and the following officers were elected: John A. McMaster, president and manager; D. J. Hunter, secretary-treasurer; H. Gillespie, Dr. Lewis, Jas. McMaster, directors. Work commenced yesterday and the staff will be increased shortly. Two hundred binders will be manufactured this year.

A HEARSE BADLY WRECKED.—While the funeral of the late John Sherra, the man who was fatally kicked by a horse, on Tuesday evening, was on the way to the cemetery this (Thursday) afternoon an unfortunate accident occurred. Undertaker J. H. Hulse had charge of the funeral and when ascending a hill near Mono Centre the hearse rolled over an embankment and the coffin containing the corpse was thrown out on the road. The hearse was badly wrecked and it will take $250 to repair the damage.

B. OF T. BANQUET.—The members of the Orangeville board of trade held their first annual banquet at the Gordon house on Wednesday evening of last week, and a brilliant affair it was. About fifty B. of T. men and their friends sat down to an inviting supper, to which full justice was done. President Geo. Endacott delivered a speech dealing with the workings of the organization and the great benefit it was to the town. The usual toasts were responded to in an able manner, and a most enjoyable evening was spent by the members and their guests.

SHE GOT THE DISHES.—Miss Maggie Carroll of East Garafraxa, daughter of Councillor David Carroll, won the valuable prize of a set of china dishes offered by James Leighton, the east Broadway grocer, for the best tub of butter brought to market on Thursday last. A great many entered in this competition and the judges, Mrs. Gordon, Mrs. Lamont, Orangeville, and Mrs J Island, Mono, had a hard time to determine who was entitled to the prize. Miss Carroll was well pleased with the result, and East Garry now claims the prize butter maker of the county.

SONS OF THE THISTLE.—Grand Organizer Nimmo of Toronto organized a branch of the Sons of Scotland here on Monday evening. The lodge, which will be known as Heather Camp, starts off with a membership of forty, and it will undoubtedly increase before many months. The following officers were elected: Alex Steele, Chief; John Maclaren, Chieftain; Alex. Sutherland, P. C; Thos. Stevenson, C; D. McPherson, R. S; W. Sutherland, F. S.; John Aikon, S. B.; W. Johnston, T., D. C. Lamont, M; Wm. Laing, O. G; D. Moody, I. G; A. Bremner, Piper; Dr. Fraser, Physician.

AT THE TOWN HALL.—Camille Townsend will appear at the town hall on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, Dec 29 and 30th, in a repertoire consisting of The Queen of Hearts and East Lynne. Miss Townsend was leading lady with Lawrence Barrett, the great American actor, last season, which is a sufficient guarantee of her ability as an actress. She is supported by a strong company, and Orangeville is fortunate in being promised a visit from this talented aggregation of dramatic talent. The costumes worn by Miss Townsend are described as superb, and ladies will see them with delight. They play under the auspices of the Citizens' band.

GOING TO HAMILTON.—Mr. E. S. Ambrose, the genial accountant at the Bank of Hamilton here, has been notified of his promotion to the head office at Hamilton and will leave for his new post in the Ambitious city in a few days. Mr. Ambrose has been a resident of Orangeville for about three years and during that time he has become very popular with the people of the town and those doing business with the bank. Mr. A was an obliging official and his departure is generally regretted, but all will join with THE SUN in congratulating him on his promotion. It is rumored that Mr. Rigby Swinton of Hamilton, formerly of this town, will be Mr. Ambrose's successor.

PINKERTON—KEYS.—A very pleasant event occurred on Wednesday afternoon at half past three o'clock at the residence of Mr. Jas. Keys, Centre street, the occasion being the marriage of his daughter, Louie, to Mr. A. J. Pinkerton of the C.P.R. Rev. D.C. Hossack, pastor of St. Andrew's church, performed the ceremony in the presence of about thirty invited guests. The bride who was tastefully attired in a travelling costume of seal brown cloth, was assisted by Miss Bertha Corbett while Mr Geo. Burg of Harriston supported the groom. At the conclusion of the ceremony the happy couple received the hearty congratulations of all and the wedding stood was partaken of. Mr. and Mrs Pinkerton left on the evening train on a trip to Harriston, Clifford and other places. THE SUN extends its congratulations.

... horses were unhitched from the rig and put in their stalls. Mr. Sherra was in the act of removing the harness when one of the animals made a vicious kick, the iron shod hoof striking him on the head and

CRUSHING IN HIS SKULL.

Death took place instantly. There was no time for anything to be done, the accident occurring with awful suddenness.

Deceased was a well known and highly respected resident of Mono and his sad and sudden taking-off is deeply regretted. Mr. Sherra was about 63 years of age and a widow and grown-up family survive him. A great deal of sympathy is felt for the bereaved family, and the loss they have sustained is very great indeed. Mr. Sherra was a member of Tyrone lodge, S.O.L.F.A., of this town and the brethren have charge of the funeral. The remains will be interred to-morrow (Friday) morning, and to the relatives and friends a Merry Christmas will be a day of the deepest grief. Truly, in the midst of life we are in death.

FIREMEN AT PRACTICE.—The firemen were called out for practice a few minutes after 5 o'clock on Monday evening and they responded to the call in a very short space of time. A line of hose was laid from the hydrant opposite Faulkner, street about 200 yards from the fire hall, and water was turned on in less than four minutes after the alarm was sounded. The new siamese coupling was tried for the first time and it gave the best of satisfaction. This contrivance enables the fire laddies to continue two branches from a single line of hose, and cannot fail to prove very handy when a fire occurs. All the hydrants were tested, and the boys did everything on the double quick. With a little more practice the brigade will be in first class shape.

WE'LL NOT STARVE,—Newspaper men, as a rule, have a great time keeping the wolf from the door, and it is quite unnecessary for us to say that this institution is no exception to the rule. But we'll keep the gaunt animal at bay for a couple of weeks anyway and by that time some philanthropic decision may replenish our larder. Last Thursday our cupboard presented the appearance of the fabled Mother Hubbard's, but Mrs. George Gray of Wellington street was kind enough to send up a bag of fine potatoes, for which she will please accept our thanks. Mr. Thomas Reddick of Mono must have been informed of our precarious condition, for he acted the gentleman by bringing us the best two bushels of potatoes that the banner township could produce. Thanks

A LONG RUN.—Shortly after 7 o'clock Tuesday evening Broadway and Mill street pedestrians were startled by the clatter of hoofs and the yells of a crowd at the corner of the above streets, and before an explanation could be made a team of horses dashed by with nothing but the tongue of a buggy attached to them. The team belonged to Mr. Wm. Corbitt of East Garafraxa, a short distance from town. He and another man attended a sale at Charleston and driving home the horses took fright and commenced to run away. This occurred a lot this side of Charleston, and it was impossible to check their speed until they reached the town. Under the circumstances, everything went well until the horses dissolved partnership with the buggy at the foot of east Broadway, and the excited animals came dashing up this thoroughfare and struck down Mill street at a terrific rate of speed. They were finally captured and appeared none the worse of their long race. The occupants of the rig escaped uninjured.

IT'S BOOMING.—The Orangeville weekly market is steadily growing and if things are properly conducted it will be a great 'Change before many weeks go by. Every week people who used to do their trading in other towns are to be seen disposing of their produce on the market, and local and foreign buyers have to put on their jags to get there. The prizes awarded last Thursday were: For best three turkeys, Mrs. Jos. Maxwell, Caledon, dressing case, value $2, by J. R. Dodds; pair geese, Mrs B. Bradley, East Garafraxa, $1 cash, by W. L. Walsh; two pair chickens, Mrs. Daniel McKim, Caledon, $1 cash, by John McKim; pair ducks, Thos. Lyness, Albion, $1 cash, by G. A. Campbell; tub of butter, 30 lbs., Miss M. Carroll, East Garafraxa, set of dishes, value $13, by J Leighton; crock of butter, Jonathan Flatt, Mono Centre, 3 cents per pound over market price, F. J. King & Co.; roll of butter, 12 to 15 lbs., W. B. Marshall, East Garafraxa, 3 cents per lb. over market, price, by A. Turner; tub of butter, Adam Hunter, East Garafraxa, tea, value $1, by T. Chambers.

D. F. I. ANNUAL MEETING.—The annual meeting of the members of the Dufferin Farmers' Institute was held in the town hall at Shelburne on Friday last, a large crowd turning out for the occasion. After some minor business had been transacted the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: W. J. Sproul (Shelburne), president; H. Graham (Whitfield), vice-president; Geo. Island (Orangeville), secretary-treasurer, re-elected; Smith Crossley (Camilla), Alex. McDonald (Shelburne), directors for Mono; Chas. Anderson (Whitfield), James Torrance; directors for Amaranth; N. Harvey (Shelburne), J. F. Breen (Melancthon), directors for Melancthon, Thos. Ferguson (Whitfield), Wm. Shields (Shelburne), directors for Hulmur; G. Island and W. J. Sproul, delegates to central institute, Toronto. G. Island, Dr. Barr, G. Leighton, H. Graham, A. McDonald, Dr. Laurence, J. F. Breen, W. J. Sproul were appointed a committee to consider the advisability of establishing a library in connection with the institute. The best of good feeling prevailed throughout the proceedings and everything passed off harmonously.

Council adjourned.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for more than twenty years, and I think it is the best. For restoring the hair to its original color, and for a dressing, it is the most successful of all. Mrs. Geo. La Force, Mission Ridge, Mich.
"Ayer's Hair Vigor is a most meritorious preparation for the hair. I speak from my own experience, for my hair commenced the growth of some inches in length shortly after using the Vigor to dress it, and it is now very thick. J. W. Brown, Editor "Enterprise," MacArthur, Ont.
"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past two years, and find it all it is represented to be. It restores the natural color to gray hair, causes the hair to grow freely, and keeps it soft and pliant. Mrs. M. V. Day, Oshkosh, N. Y.
"My father, at 70, lost the top of his head, and all the hair grew from the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor the hair began coming back in three weeks, and is now as thick and of the natural color."—P. J. Cullum, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

when I found all the desires of my untamed heart were thwarted. But deep out of all is my remorse for wild words said to John—words uttered rashly, with unthinking lips, when I taunted him with his meek endurance, or urged him to speak bravely to Eleanor of his love. Oh, how could I be so mad—I, who knew him—how could I?'

Olive's anguish overcame her, and bowing her head on her hands, she wept silently.

"Do not reproach yourself on John's account," said Sir Hilton, pitifully; "I trust I shall yet find him, and take him in peace back to Trewavas."

Olive looked up, and her glance shook Sir Hilton Trewavas to his soul. What did it say? What did it mean? Why was it full of a pity so much greater than his own for John? Why, too, was her grief so unlike the grief guilt should wear? These questions did not come in any shape of words; they came like a flash, which vanished in the excitement of the time; for Olive, with some what of her old fire, broke out suddenly into bitter self reproach.

"I meant only to rouse him into a manlier, braver course," she cried, wringing her hands tightly. "I thought, if he spoke to you—if he told you how he loved that poor girl, you would see how pale was your own affection for her compared to his, and—"

"Olive, every word you say is a stab to me," interrupted Sir Hilton, hurriedly. "Surely you have nothing to reproach yourself with respecting John; it is I who have been selfish and blind with regard to him."

"Tell him so if you find him at Trewavas," said Olive in a very earnest tone, "and say I asked him to forgive me. Is lady Trewavas well?" she added hurriedly.

"I think so," he replied.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

SUNBEAMS.

It may be remarked that the widower's weight of woe is generally the extent of his wait.

The man who "grasped at a straw" wasn't drowning. He was trying to "drown his sorrows."

A—If I were a minister I should hate to dine at a banker's table. B—Why? A—Think of three days of grace!

The special quality of Ayer's Hair Vigor is that it restores the natural growth, color, and texture of the hair. It vitalizes the roots and follicles, removes dandruff, and heals itching humors in the scalp. In this respect, it surpasses all similar preparations.

Great men owe their fame to the littleness of the rest of the world. Fame is only the result of comparison after all.

It is natural for a fellow who has his four horns of whiskey to think he is big, but it is because he tumbles to things so easily.

Are you tired and worn out? Is life a burden? Are your cheeks pale and your appetite poor? Try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and feel like a new person. They are good for both sexes, young and old.

Intimate friend—"Do you see that handsome girl playing by the piano? I rejected him twice."

Perditta—"That's nothing. I rejected him twice."

A young man will catch at a straw. That is what it is sorrow he is drowning, and the other end of the straw is in a barrel of hard cider.

Are you suffering from a cold in the head? Do not neglect it—delays are dangerous, death usually courted. Nasal Balm is an unfailing cure in all cases of catarrh and cold in head.

When you have the Christmas tree up, it doesn't mean that you have it fixed up.

At Christmas time it is well enough to ape the English as far as the plum pudding is concerned.

As Ayer's Sarsaparilla outstrips all other blood-purifiers in popular favor, so Ayer's Almanac is the most universally familiar publication of the kind in the world. It is printed in ten languages and the annual issue exceeds fourteen millions of copies. Ask your druggist for it.

Jaggs (entering pawnshop)—O Say, mister, I've just escaped from the Keeley institute, and I'm full o' gold. How much can I get on it?

There are lots of men in the world at the foot of the procession who believe that they are at the head, though they admit that the procession is going the wrong way.

Good Advice.

DEAR SIRS,—I have been troubled with headache for over 40 years, and tried it so bad about once a week that I was sometimes not expected to live. I was advised to use B. B. B., and have used 3 bottles. I now have an attack only once in four or five months, and feel that if I continue using it I will be entirely cured. Therefore I recommend it highly.

MRS E. A. STOREY, Shetland, Ont.

Rub the price mark off the present unless it is an expensive one.

If you wish to surprise your girl never ask her what she would like for Christmas.

For Pain or Colds.

GENTLEMEN,—Fifteen months ago I had a boating breast. I tried a number of remedies but got no relief. I then tried Hagyard's Yellow Oil, which gave me instant relief. It is the best thing I ever used for all kinds of pain or cold.

MRS. JOHN CORBETT, St Mary's, Ont.

Don't buy your girl a present on the instalment plan, as she might jilt you before you have made all the payments.

It Seldom Fails.

DEAR SIRS,—I took two bottles of Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, and it cured me of hoarseness and tightness of the chest after other things had failed. I have also tried B.B.B. It works splendidly for weakness and headache.

SAMUEL MADDOCK, Bermaville, Ont.

Don't ask your child what he wants unless you intend giving it to him.

Though money makes the mare go, it makes Santa Claus come.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Colds, coughs, shortness of Breath.—These maladies require early and unremitting attention, for if neglected they often end in asthma, bronchitis, or consumption. The Ointment well rubbed upon the chest and back, penetrating the skin, is absorbed and carried directly to the lungs, whence it expels all impurities. All the blood in the body is perpetually passing through the lungs, and here all noxious particles tending to disease can be quickly, thoroughly, and permanently neutralized, rendered harmless, or ejected from the system. Holloway's Ointment and Pills perfectly accomplish this purification; through the blood thus cleansed, the influence of these wonderful medicaments reaches the remotest parts of the human body, and thus cures all diseased action, whether internal or external.

Keep the Works in good order.

W. H. COMSTOCK, Brockville, Ont.
NORMAN, Ont., January 15, 1890.
DEAR SIR,—Your "Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills" are the best regulator for the system that humanity can use. Life is as the sixpence; frail and delicate are many of its works. A tiny particle of foreign substance adheres to the smallest wheel in the works, and what is the result?—at first, only a slight disturbance is perceptible in its time-keeping, but wait you see the obstruction grows, the irregularity becomes greater, until at last, what could have been easily cleared with little trouble, in the beginning, will now require much care in thoroughly cleansing the entire works. So it is in human life—a slight derangement is neglected, it grows and increases, imperceptibly at first, then rapidly, until what could, in the beginning, have been cured with little trouble, becomes almost fatal. To prevent this, I advise all to purify the system frequently, by the use of Morse's Pills, and so preserve vigor and vitality.
Yours faithfully, H. J. ATWELL.

The Travellers' Safe-Guard.

AMHERSTBURG POST, N.S., Jan. 27, '90.
DEAR SIR,—For many years, I have been a firm believer in your "Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills." Not with a blind faith, but a confidence wrought by an actual personal experience of their value and merit. My business is such that I spend much of my time away from home, and I would not consider my travelling outfit complete without a box of Morse's Pills.
Yours, &c., M. E. MCLEWIN.

A valuable Article sells well.

W. H. COMSTOCK, Brockville, Ont.
DEAR SIR,—This is to certify that I deal in Patent Medicines, including various kinds of Pills. I sell more of the Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills than of all the others combined. Their sales I feel are still increasing.
Yours, &c., H. L. NICHOLSON.

The Best of Rock Salt, for Stock.

Read what Prof. Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says regarding proper ways of salting stock:—"Dairy cattle should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has convinced me that when cows are denied salt for a period of even one week they will yield from 14 to 15 per cent less milk and that of an inferior quality. Each milk will, on an average, turn sour in twenty four hours less time than milk drawn from the same animal when receiving salt every day, all other conditions of being equal."

THE only chemically pure Salt ever discovered, analysed 99 84-100 Pure Salt. All kinds of stock will do better where this Salt is used; one ton will go four times as far as common salt, hence it is cheaper. It is the finest Salt in the world for the preservation of all kinds of meat, all the large packers are using it. It is sold cheaper than any other lump salt. We guarantee this Salt as advertised. Make a trial and you will always use it; we have in stock fine and coarse, at

"Like Magic,"

THIS effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Colds, Coughs, Croup and Sore Throat are, in most cases, immediately relieved by the use of this wonderful remedy. It strengthens the vocal organs, allays irritation, and prevents the inroads of Consumption; in every stage of this dread disease, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. D. Conley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, it being more salable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great success was considered marvelous."—H. S. Drake, M. D., Dellet, Kans.

"My little niece, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skilful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine; saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers."—C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

THE PASSING OF THE YEAR.

CHIME; and the noisy echoing clock
Tells the last stroke and then is dumb.
Grim taps that sharp on time's broad knock
Where the lost year lies cold and numb;
Breaks a charred flag got on the hearth
And sings the bottle from the crane,
While high above the shrouded earth
Dawn the far moon toward its wane.

TOM; and the sharp-fingered watching's yawn
Gleams cavernous beside the coals,
And flickering shadows, faintly drawn,
Dance lightly to the rafter poles;
And round in her mottled fur
And lengthened curve of cat-like sweep,
With muffled and recurrent purr,
The ancient house-cat dozes deep.

Eleven; and the jarring strokes
Come harshly as a warning will;
Outside, the giant naked oaks,
Show gristly, stand all white and still;
And like to ships the wan clouds pass
Across the lone moon's argent shield
While, down below, the frozen grass
Lies dead within a frozen field.

Twelve; and upon my feet I stand
And fling aside the unread book.
For ghosts rise up on every hand
As backward o'er the days I look.
Aye! warp of fate, and woof of life.
What matters, since but death shall spin,
Falls the last stroke, a scorching knife—
The old year's out, the new year's in.

THE PASSING OF THE YEAR

LIKE; and the noisy echoing clock
Tells the last circle and then is dumb.
Grim tape that sharp on time's brazen knock
Where the long year
Rescinded and numb;
Breaks a charred faggot on the hearth
And dings the kettle
from the crook,
While high above the shrouded earth
Dare the far moon toward the wane.

Ten; and the sharp-fanged watching's pass

Gleams cavernous beside the coals,
And flickering shadows, faintly drawn,
Dance lightly to the rafter poles;
And royal in her mottled fur
And lengthened curve of cat-like sweep,
With muffled and recurrent purr,
The ancient house-cat dozes deep.

Eleven; and the jarring strokes
Come harshly as a warning will;
Outside, the giant elm oaks,
Snow girdled, stand all white and still;
And like to ships the wan clouds pass
Across the lone moon's argent shield
While, down below, the frozen grass
Lies dead within a frozen field.

Twelve; and upon my feet I stand
And fling aside the unread book.
For ghosts rise up on every hand
As backward o'er the days I look.
Yet was of fate, and wool of life;
What matters, since but death shall spin,
Fails the last stroke, a covering knife—
The old year's out, the new year's in.

ZEB'S NEW YEAR'S CALL.

ANT to learn 'im a lesson did you say?"

"Yaas, an' in a way that'll keep th' smarty feelin's out o' the kentry." The latter speaker then cracked his long snake-whip as he spake, and the brush-heap upon which he was mounted quickly sprang forward.

"Th' gang'll be ready, I s'pose?" half shrieked the other, and he followed after. Their coming closer, he continued, while the two ponies bounded lightly over the prairie. "In course th' thing has got ter be just a step to."

"An' Zeb's bein' sick, too, makes it worse. Thar he is at Mangel's cabin on his back—all th' letters an' heavy sarcs ter boot. Th' doctor, he says he kinder 'ad th' fever, an' he's shaken 'im all right, an' he's bin a-shivarin' lately ter come up any minute. But all ter once he looks over 'cross th' prairie, an' when dun he see but smack comin' frum th' chimbly of his cabin. Some pesky sparks jumper thinks he's got a bonanzy; but don't yer forgit thet they'll be some naughty interestin' fun in th' neighborhood of thet cabin ter-morry."

It was an intensely cold, still and painfully clear winter's morning when, according to programme, the knot of settlers gathered at Mangel's for their proposed expedition.

"Git on," called the leader, and all swung into their saddles. As they did so a pale figure rode from the stable.

"Why, Zeb, you're not going!" exclaimed Mangel. "You ain't well enough."

"Yes, I am," replied that individual. "It's my funeral, an' I'm goin' to hev' a part in it."

"D'ye know what day it is, boys?" suddenly asked Mangel.

"Saturday," responded some one.

"No, not that; but of th' year. It's New Year's."

"Ah! then this ere's a New Year's call," said Zeb, and he laughed in a feeble kind of way.

The others joined him, and all thought of happier New Year days passed in the old homes, far from the prairies.

Zeb seemed most pensive of all, and did not look up until the leader suddenly remarked: "They're a storm comin' yonder."

A gray mist had risen in the north and was rapidly approaching. The men knew that it meant the terrible blizzard in which neither man nor beast is sure of existence.

But they were approaching the house, and hurried on.

"Th' feller is late gettin' up," noted one, as the little cavacade drew nearer.

"Why, he's gone!" said Zeb. "I'm afraid they ain't nobody ter home ter receive our call."

The blizzard's first fierce breath struck them as he spoke, and before they could dismount the fine, feathery flakes of snow were covering their coarse coats with white.

"If they've gone out in this storm—" Zeb began.

"It's th' end of 'em," completed a companion. "But let's hurry, boys. Hustle in an' we'll warm a little an' skip for home."

They needed no urging, and in a moment all were huddled around the earthen fireplace which did duty at one end of the cabin for cooking and heating purposes. Zeb began picking up some papers to light a fire. Suddenly he stopped, and faint and weak as he was from his recent illness, he looked almost ghostly in his trepidation.

"Did—did—any of—you—fellers bring this here?" he asked, slowly, and with terror in his tones.

"Why, no, we didn't, seein' th' way th' storm set in ter th' north," replied the leader, for all the others were too frightened to speak.

Zeb was a speck on the north-bound wagon trail, and they stood with the wind towards him.

"All th' wagin's gone this way," he thundered above the noise of the storm when they had overtaken him.

They spread far apart and followed on. Zeb led them. He seemed to have an unerring instinct that was taking him to the object of his search.

And it was a tree one, for as they dashed down a slope into one of those "draws," or ravines, that cross the rolling prairies in every direction they came on a travel-stained prairie schooner, or covered wagon, seeking shelter behind a struggling group of cottonwoods, while the team was shivering just beyond.

Zeb leaped from his pacing caloose and threw back the curtains that closed the end of the wagon's covering.

For an instant his eyes were unable to pierce the semi-darkness and then he saw the ill-defined figures of an elderly man and a woman.

Half dazed, they sat up.

"Mary!" called Zeb, feeling rather than seeing that his heart's wish was realized.

Her answer was not distinguishable, but in a moment the rescuer was inside the wagon, chafing her benumbed hands, while the others were doing a like service for the father.

"We must git back to th' cabin, boys," said Zeb. "We'll freeze here. They're half frozen now."

"All of us can't stay thar," spoke up the Vermonter. "Mangel kin help ye, an' th' rest of us'll skoot for our shanties."

This was agreed to, and before the ponies and their riders were entirely out of sight over the bluff, Zeb was driving the team of the campers at a rattling pace toward his claim.

It was two days before Mangel could return home, but life was not up-hill work in the cabin with the campers' stores for rations. And then to see Zeb's happiness was something.

"Thet to think, Zeb," said Mary, as they were bidding Mangel good-bye, "that for ten years I had thought you as good as dead and you were certain that I was—and to find me and father on the way to brother Tom's as you did—it is like a novel."

"Only I ain't quite so pretty as I used to be," put in Zeb.

"While I am an old maid of—well, I won't tell how many years," laughed Mary. "And you took me for claim jumpers!"

"Weal, ain't you got th' claim? Say, Mangel," turning to his comrade, "tell th' boys to come over ter-morry. They's to be a weddin' here, ain't there, Mary?"

But Mary had fled indoors.

The wedding was held, however, and the claim-jumpers stayed on Zeb's claim—at least one of them did.

And the proprietor never objected. Indeed he is frequently heard to boast of the pleasure resulting from his strange New Year's call.

The Gift of the Passing Year.

Have you given glory to God, in word, in deed and in look? Have you made life about you so joyful that peace and good-will have come down and their fragrance over all? Has the heavy cloud, the angry look, the petulant reply been counted as of nothing? How much good will have you shown to the erring brother or sister? How much and how often have you put out a helping hand and the word that should go with it? Have you been cold and cruel to others, you are about to leave behind you, the little Child born so many years ago makes no distinction between the sinners and those who are not, and He came into this world not to save those who had already made a place for themselves, but to show to the sinner the way to joy and happiness, and to make life better and easier for him. "But," say you, "you question so much why life be made easy for the one who does wrong?" My friend, until you make virtue as attractive as vice you will never lead a sinner in the right way. There will never be sweet, pure, honest good-will until we have fewer Pharisees and more Samaritans. It's a little bit of a sermon this, on Christmas day from me to you; but it comes in with the old, old text, that the bells are chiming out, the hearts are beating forth, that the holy carrion whisper out and that all over the earth makes the mother hold the baby closer to her to hear at once the words sung by the angels so many years ago, listened to by saint and sinner alike to-day, those same dear old words that mean joy is with us as the carols go out.

"Glory to God on high and on earth peace, good-will to men."

The Year That Is Just Ahead.

In a few days we shall begin the new year. The old one is quickly going, a year of success for some and failure for others. What of the days to come? Many of my readers will form good resolutions, and I hope they will be able to keep them. For myself I care little for boy or man who has not sufficient strength of character to do as conscience and duty dictates, without making resolutions every few months. Is it not better to begin life aright, following the path of duty at all times, and under all circumstances? Every boy who reads these lines knows whether he is daily doing his duty to God, to himself and to those whom he serves. No boy can succeed by doing wrong. No great name has ever been founded except on the eternal principles of truth and justice. No great fortune has ever been built up except the foundation stone was honesty. The year that is to come will bring its trials, its cares, its vexations and its disappointments, as well as its successes and pleasures. Some boys will fail and others will succeed. If failure comes through doing one's duty honestly and fearlessly, there will be compensation in knowing that self-respect has not been sacrificed. If success comes by dishonorable means, it will only be temporary. My word of advice to you, my younger brother, is to make only one resolution for the coming year: "Be right!" In that, you have embodied every manly principle. It is a condensed Golden Rule. It is a sound business maxim. If followed, it will bring you fortune and peace of mind. It is the philosopher's stone—contentment.

WIDOW DRAKE'S BEAU.

Why He Looks Forward Impatiently to New Year's Day.

"WELL," said the hired girl, as she took a clothespin from her mouth and neatly fastened a pair of trousers of ancient cut and ample proportions to the clothesline, "when it comes to widows, I own 'em to be buryed my mother standin'. What Mrs. Drake can see in that furrin-speakin' westerner I can't see. But there's no question but what the weddin's to come off some time soon, as her tellin' me to fetch three hens she's thus balonged to number one cut an' size 'one is to my mind a sure sign she's goin' to dispose of 'em an' get 'em out the way before number two comes along.

"Her first's been under the sod times ten years an' she's mourned him long enough, the land knows. I ain't in no way against widows marryin' and trvin' it again if they like; but I do say it 'ud be more seemly to choose a man o' her own Yankee stock than one o' frog-eatin' French descent."

And the hired girl gave the vest which she was shaking a jerk which sent one of the buttons half-way across the yard.

It certainly did look as though there was to be a wedding at Widow Drake's before long, and the neighbors whispered that there was a little romance connected with it. And so there was, but they never could have guessed what it was about, neither could you if you were to try for a month—so I am going to tell you all about it.

TOM PURRED HIS APPROVAL.

The Widow Drake was plump, well-preserved little body, with fresh rosy cheeks and bright blue eyes and the smoothest of brown hair without a thread of silver in it. She was not young, but nobody would have guessed that she was forty, and as a woman is only as old as she looks, she kept her own counsel and let people speak of her as being thirty-five.

Her husband had left her a neat little home and enough money to keep her comfortably without any care beyond a few [illegible] and there, in the shape of a fine purse [illegible].

Her life was calm and uneventful; no adventures came to her unsought, and she and her twilight stroking the great Malteser which was her companion and confidant.

Priscilla, the maid of all work, was a woman of too mature an age to be called a girl in any other sense than a "hired girl," and she chose that title of her own free will. She had lived with Mrs. Drake during her brief married life and the widow had kept her ever since because she dreaded being alone in the house. But Priscilla was neither sympathetic nor responsive, and Tom, the Maltese cat, was much more apt to agree with the widow's opinions, so it was to him that she whispered, upon this evening in June, that she had half a mind to marry again and take up a claim.

And Tom purred his approval and the widow went on and poured into his ear a scheme which had been working in her mind for several days.

Of course every one said that she must be crazy. Odd, over-thrifty and venturesome were the mildest of the adjectives which were applied to this harmless little woman, who was simply tired of the dull life which she was living and who knew of no other way of making a change which would benefit her health and mind and her purse as well.

And that is how it happened that this woman, who seemed far too dainty for such a life, was living away out on a Dakota claim, in a snug little shanty of pine boards, banked with sods and in the midst of the cruelest of surroundings.

It was the first of July when she filed her claim and it was required that there should be a six months' residence upon it. Everybody said that she never would stay half the time; but she smiled and stocked old Tom.

It wasn't so bad, after all, she thought. There were plenty of neighbors—not very near, to be sure—but half a mile seems so much nearer in that clear atmosphere which transmits light and sound so marvelously.

Each morning she heard the shrill vocal salute of the two schoolma'ams who lived on the claim next hers; and from her own door she would call back a hearty "halloo-a," which always brought a smile to the faces of those ancient dames.

And then, out there everybody was so kind to everybody else, and somebody was always offering to bring one's mail or one's groceries from the queer law hut which served as general store, post-office, machine shop and dwelling in one.

Of course the bill of fare was apt to be a little monotonous. There was a great deal of salt pork and bacon and dried fish, but there were lots of tinned vegetables and canned fruit from home to help out; and, of course, the neighbors were always ready to share with a neighbor who was in need. So, on the whole, she was not at all lonely.

Her first visitor was a young farmer named Edmund Graham, who was on the concession crossing when the C. P. R. passenger train came along going north. The trains go very slow at this point on account of the grade and Mr. Graham attempted to board it. One hand was encumbered by a waterproof and he was unable to accomplish his object before he had been carried to the cattle-guard. Mr. Graham fell into the pit and received very severe injuries. He lay unconscious for upward of twelve hours at his home. Some of his ribs are broken and it will be some time before he will be able to get around.—Brampton Banner.

MUCH BETTER, Thank You!

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Last week a farmer out near Norwich took to that village a number of bills of defunct banks, which he found in an old stocking when cleaning up after the burial of his wife. Altogether, he found $1,132, among which there was $246 in bills belonging to the Exchange, Consolidated, Federal, Royal Canadian, Molsons and Niagara District banks. The old woman, apparently had no faith in the banks of the present time, but the interest on that amount would have been considerable, as the money must have been in the stocking for a great many years.

Six election petitions against Conservatives in Nova Scotia cannot be tried owing to judgment on Saturday declaring invalid orders given enlarging the time for the commencement of the trials.

While engaged at a threshing at Mr. Maurice Dowd's, near Arthur, on Saturday last, Mr. Jeremiah O'Riley had a narrow escape of instant death, and received several severe injuries. He was cutting bands when by some mishap his platform gave away precipitating him upon the shaft around which he was rapidly revolved an unknown number of times until he was extricated in an unconscious condition. While badly hurt it is almost marvellous to say that Mr. O'Riley is not seriously injured, but he has not the slightest desire of repeating the performance of whirling around the shaft of a threshing machine.

The United States has ordered a number of torpedo boats. In the event of war with Chili 15,000 men can be furnished on short notice for transportation from San Francisco.

Last Friday morning Mr. Jos. Graham, a young farmer near Edmonton, was on the concession crossing when the C. P. R. passenger train came along going north. The trains go very slow at this point on account of the grade and Mr. Graham attempted to board it. One hand was encumbered by a waterproof and he was unable to accomplish his object before he had been carried to the cattle-guard. Mr. Graham fell into the pit and received very severe injuries. He lay unconscious for upward of twelve hours at his home. Some of his ribs are broken and it will be some time before he will be able to get around.—Brampton Banner.

As he came into the little room, bare of all the pretty little articles which had made it so cheerful and homelike, his heart gave a thump to think that it would so soon be empty and deserted, and he resolved to say what was on his mind at once.

GOOD RESOLUTIONS.

THOSE who intend to try once more the cultured experiment of making New Year's resolutions have not much time to lose. Such resolutions, if they are by any possibility to be kept, require a good deal of steady beforehand. It must be the right kind of study, too. As a rule the more thought that is bestowed upon the subject the more elaborate and lengthy the set of resolutions become. That is going in the wrong direction. A more useful kind of study is that which discriminates, prunes and discards the superfluities. Don't resolve too much. If you do you will fail to keep your resolutions and that will tend to weaken your faith in yourself. If you are particularly fond of an after-dinner cigar and resolve to dispense with it, that is one of the resolutions that a discriminating resolver would prune out, because there is next to no possibility of its being kept more than three days at the utmost. There are some resolutions that are easier to keep, and to those the prudent man will confine himself. Resolve that if you sit down suddenly on the icy sidewalk, or pound your thumb with a hammer, you will make a few cursory remarks; because it is a resolution that you will surely keep. Resolve that in any case you will refrain from the impety that is another that you can't help keeping. Resolutions that are kept are a source of satisfaction, says the Boston Globe, and the kind that are made every New Year's day and never kept are a fountain of more or less poignant regret.

A One Sided Parley.

Stay, stay, old greybeard, Father Time!
Give ear a moment, prithee.
I've sung thee oft in tripping rhyme,
Now I would parley with thee.

Put down your crooked scythe and glass,
To rest you here a minute,
A New Year soon will come and pass,
With you and I both in it.

I hope to 'scape oblivion's maw;
You will, I'm pretty certain,
Unless eternity should draw
The universal curtain.

We're chums, you see (don't look so stern),
Both smitten with death's cancer,
And these few things that I would learn,
If you're polite, you'll answer.

What bringest thou with this New Year,
This annual to-morrow?
Nay, nay, shrewd cut, I'd shed no tear
Though it be death and sorrow.

Dost bring me wealth? I am not mean,
And yet, I must confess it,
For some that more than I have seen
I'd kiss your hand and bless it.

Or it is fame! Ah, that I relish
Were kindness beyond measure,
For though she's but a fickle wraith,
Her smile gives all my pleasure.

Or love, perhaps? Life is such woe
When hearts are sad and lonely,
Bring my lost love of long ago,
Oh, bring me her, her only!

Nay, thou art dead! Then get thee off!
Grief makes the proud heart stranger.
Course yet proud, at thee I scoff,
And I'm first in the kingdom!

Three Winter Desserts.

A good dish of orange fritters can be made by taking four oranges, peel them, taking off all the white pith without breaking into the pulp; divide in four or five pieces, through natural divisions of the orange; dip each piece into common batter, and fry in hot lard. Serve on napkin with powdered sugar.

A GOOD PLUM-PUDDING.

One and one-half pound raisins, one and three-quarters of a pound of currants, one pound of figs, two pounds moist sugar, two pounds of bread-crumbs, sixteen eggs, two pounds finely chopped suet, six ounces mixed candied peel, one ounce ground nutmeg, one ounce ground cinnamon, one-half ounce bitter almonds, one-half pint molasses. Mix all the dry ingredients together and moisten with the eggs; when all well mixed, flour a strong pudding-bag; put in pudding, tie well and boil eight hours. A nice sauce is to take one cupful of sweet cream, whites of three eggs and three tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar. When the cream is chilled, whip and put in a cool place, beat the whites stiff and add sugar and cream. Any flavoring may be used.

GERMAN COFFEE CAKE.

One quart milk, eight ounces sugar, eight ounces butter, a little salt, two ounces yeast, lemon flavor, flour, six eggs. Make a soft sponge of the milk, yeast and flour; let it rise. Then add all other ingredients. Make a stiff dough, adding all flour required. Let rise again, roll out, put on a pan and let it rise again. Brush it with egg, sprinkle sugar and chopped almonds on top and bake. The almonds may be omitted if desired.

A Christmas Echo.

"Girls are no good anyway," said little Johnny; "they ain't got any sense."

"How's that?" asked Merritt.

"Because," was the reasonable reply, "as soon as their stockings get big enough to hold a lot of things they stop hanging them up."

A Sly Dog.

"I had to jump on Sue with both feet," said Miss Scadds. "That wouldn't hurt her," replied young Hunker. "Your feet are so small." Now she smiles on him.

Unhappy, and New Year's So Near.

"Did you see father, Harry?" she asked. "Yes; I told him I had been courting you and——" "Well, what did he do?" "He set aside the decree of the court."

Don't monkey with the publisher. He is liable to be loaded. Two proprietor of a certain paper sued a delinquent subscriber for eleven dollars. He claimed that he never subscribed for the paper, and did not propose to pay. The judge instructed the jury that if the evidence disclosed the fact that the delinquent had taken the paper from the office, or caused it to be taken, they should find decision for the plaintiff. It cost the man nearly one hundred to settle what eleven dollars would have paid. It pays to be honest, especially with the printer.

New Saxon Salve.

DEAR SIRS,—I have used six bottles of B. B. B. I took it for liver complaint. Before I took it I had headache and felt stupid all the time, but now I am healthy and entirely well. In addition I have a good appetite, which I did not have previously.

THE DEPUTY-REEVESHIP.

There is a great deal of room for speculation in the deputy reeveship contest between Messrs. Marshall Green and Harry Gillespie, and how it will pomp is a question that puzzles many. Both these gentlemen have occupied seats at the council and have discharged their duties in a creditable manner. Mr. Green is more sanguine of success than his opponent, but if betting counts for anything Mr. Gillespie will come down the home stretch at a pretty rapid rate.

THE MAYORALTY.

The gentleman who has just been elected mayor of Orangeville for 1892 is well qualified to fill that responsible position. In Mr. Johnston Lindsey the ratepayers have a shrewd and astute representative, and if he does not discharge the duties devolving upon him to the satisfaction of the majority of the electors we don't know whereof we speak. Mr. Lindsey is an old resident of this town, who has filled the offices of councillor, deputy-reeve, reeve, and now he has just been elected to the chief magistrate's chair. During his municipal life Mr. Lindsey has rendered the town valuable service, and his absence from the council could not well be spared.

ELECTION TALK.

"What do you think of our new council?" asked citizen No 1 to citizen No 2, on Broadway yesterday. "Well, I don't know," replied the other; "but if Joe Riddell gets there the town is safe."

The would-be councillors of Mono are turning the township upside down and something will take a heavy drop on election night. The friends of Mr. McCluskey say that they'll elect him, so do the friends of Messrs Laird and Moffatt. We imagine Mr. McCluskey will turn right side up with ears, but who else will be crowned with victory we do not care to speculate.

A prominent Broadway merchant dropped into our office last evening and suggested that if any vacancies are to be filled in the council it would be advisable to return the two quill drivers of our local contemporaries. Their tremendous efforts during the past few weeks to revolutionise municipal matters deserve public recognition of some kind. The election for the offices of poundkeeper and chimney sweep will take place shortly.

The electors of the West ward should have no hesitation in marking their ballots for Mr. Joseph Riddell as one of their representatives at next year's council. He is a young man and has resided in Orangeville almost all his life, consequently he is well acquainted with town affairs. We haven't the slightest doubt that "Joe" will be defeated, but his friends and supporters should not rest until they place him at the head of the poll.

It is with pleasure we learn that Deputy reeve William Johnston has been promoted to the position of reeve of Amaranth. The ratepayers of that township and THE SUN seemed to have held the same opinion on this question, for we advocated the election of Mr. Johnston and we are pleased to say the ratepayers elected him by acclamation. He will discharge the duties of his new office fearlessly and honestly or we will be very much mistaken.

THE reeveship contest in East Garafraxa is causing a great deal of excitement, and the result of triangular fights, such as this one, are very different from what was expected. Reeve Hamilton, Deputy reeve Simpson and Mr. Enoch Price are the candidates. Some time ago it was said that Mr. Hamilton would retire at the end of this term, but if he entertained any such thoughts he has abandoned them. Mr. Simpson certainly deserves promotion, and we would like to see him grace the reeve's chair next year.

Many of the nominees have retired and the following are elected by acclamation: Johnston Lindsey, mayor; Henry Endacott, reeve; William Menary, William Still, councillors for the North ward; James Brown, W. J. Gordon, councillors for the South ward. There will be a contest for the deputy-reeveship between Harry Gillespie and Marshall Green. Joseph Riddell S. H. McKitrick and R. Mann are in the field for the West ward, and Messrs R F. West, Jas. Morrison and E. Bell are candidates for the council in the east.

"Prohibition is coming," so said a hotel keeper of a neighboring town to a member of the Post staff. Continuing, he remarked: "Liquor drinking is going out of fashion. It is seldom a quart or gallon is sold for a bee, sale or wedding, and the wholesale price is so high the profit at the old retail figures is very small. Not many years ago commercial men and their customers used to patronize the bar freely, but now a large majority of travellers don't drink and the treating system is practically dead as compared with the bygone days. Hotel keeping has lost its old time money making, and now only the best financing will see a man through safely. Temperance sentiment is on the rise and likely to continue so." The above was from one of the shrewdest hotel men in Huron county and has been proven true in his own experience. It is an encouraging acknowledgment to temperance people, but while so, there is a big work to be done before the desired end is attained.—Brussels Post.

OUR WATERWORKS ATTACKED

By Mr. Moody and Mr. McKitrick has a Great Time Defending the System—Notes.

The town hall was crowded to overflowing with the free and independent electors of Orangeville on Monday evening. The event was the nomination of candidates to fill the various municipal offices of the town. Nomination night is always a great jubilee in this flourishing municipality, and citizens who never enter the spacious hall more than once or twice a year never fail to turn up when candidates are to be chosen, and as we said above Monday night was no exception to the rule. The returning officer occupied a seat on the platform, and when the little hand of the reporter's Waterbury was midway between 7 and 8 o'clock the master of ceremonies arose and informed the throng that he was ready to receive nominations. A couple of golden minutes, set with one hundred and twenty diamond seconds, were gone forever and no person was yet proposed, but before the gong sounded for 8:20 the presiding officer had these names on his papers:

A FEW REMARKS.

After the returning officer had completed the usual formalities the meeting was converted into a public meeting, and anybody who could spout a little bit was cordially invited to make a speech.

Mr. Johnston Lindsey was the first speaker. He made a few pleasing introductory remarks and then referred to the financial position of the town. He thought the ratepayers would not find fault with the council in reference to the Lindsey property. He thought the council had done its duty in the matter and proceeded to discuss waterworks matters. He thought the council had done its duty in the matter of the waterworks system, and proceeded to discuss matters in connection therewith. He took the opportunity of bidding the electors a kindly good by. A number of friends had requested him to stand for a third term, but he would not comply with their request, as he recognized the now established rule that two years were sufficient for a man to occupy the chief magistrate's chair. Mr. Walsh said he had been treated kindly, in fact he often thought he had been treated too kindly, by the electors, but he had never allowed his vanity to get the better of him. After "praying" two of the local papers Mr. Walsh advocated the promotion of Mr. Lindsey to the mayor's chair. Mr. Lindsey, he said, was well qualified to fill the office and he was prepared to do all in his power to secure his election. Mr. Walsh concluded an excellent speech by saying that he would step down from the rostrum into private life.

Mr. Endacott, who was nominated for the reeveship and mayoralty, was next on the list, and he responded in his usual pleasing manner. He was a member of three of the most important committees of the council, the Finance, Town Property and Street Lighting. He was chairman of the T. P. and referred at some length to the new fire hall. He was also a member of the F. & W. and Assessment committees, and his actions during the year just closing were always above board. He was sorry that Mr. Fiddis, who was one of the best men at the council was going to retire. Mr. Endacott thought the town was one of the best in the province and it would go on and prosper.

Crown Attorney Myers mounted the platform and stated he did not intend to stand for the office of mayor. Ollie Mowat's law would not allow him to occupy a municipal office, but the Dominion law allowed a man to run for parliament and get defeated (laughter). Mr. Myers said he would be proud to occupy any municipal position in this town, because Orangeville was the greatest town in the world (cheers). At the church which he attended he had heard that the mayor did not pay all his taxes, and this probably accounted for the deficit now existing. He was not eligible for the office of mayor, but he would try to fill the higher and more responsible position of public school trustee for the West ward.

THE SUN IS FAIR.

Mr. Jesse Ketchum was the next speaker. He gave an account of his stewardship during the past year. He was elected chairman of the R. & B. committee early in the year and under his management the expenditure was kept within the appropriations, which was something that had not been done for years (applause). After further dealing with municipal matters Mr. Ketchum referred to the unfair criticism of councillors by a section of the local press. Respectable men who would willingly serve the town held back because they did not want to make themselves targets for the scurrilous articles of a section of the press. He did not object to legitimate criticism, but when newspapers couple a man's private affairs with his public actions it was high time to resent the abuse. Two of the papers, and particularly the Post, were continually libelling the town, but he must give THE SUN credit for being the only local paper that did justice to the town and town institutions (applause). At this point of his speech Mr. Ketchum was interrupted by the editor of a local journal calling out that "the press pays 100 cents on the dollar," but the free and independent electors in nearly all parts of the hall yelled to "Put him out!" "Shut up!" etc., and he created no further disturbance during the evening. Mr. Ketchum invited this individual to take the platform, but the invitation was not accepted. Mr. Ketchum thanked the electors for the kind manner in which they had treated him and closed the speech of the evening by announcing that he would not be a candidate at Monday's election. He resumed his seat amid tremendous applause from the audience.

Messrs. J. Kearns, J. S. Youmans, H. Gillespie, W. Fleming, M. Green, W. Still, W. J. Gordon, delivered first class speeches, after which Mr. John Moody attacked the waterworks and the represented financial standing of the town. He would not stand for the East ward councillorship.

John Clark, who was nominated for the East ward, ascended the platform and delivered the most exciting speech of the evening. He attacked Mayor Walsh and wanted to know what kind of a man Mr. Lindsey was to be mayor of the town. The assessment of the latter's elevator was held up by Mr. Clarke to be most unfair. Mr. Lindsey made his way to the platform and an amusing dialogue took place between the two. The audience, applauded, howled and yelled, and the excitement was intense. Finally the speakers left the stage.

A GRACEFUL COMPLIMENT.

Mr. McKitrick spoke next in defence of our waterworks system, and during his speech he paid a graceful compliment to the late John Foley, founder of THE SUN. Mr. McKitrick said his public actions had been criticised by the late gentleman and he could not object, for it was legitimate criticism. Mr. McKitrick also said THE SUN and its late editor had done a great deal for the town, he got it advertised and its progress owes much to his work and schemes for its advancement. The speaker appreciated the talent employed on the local papers, and if the citizens would unite the town would go ahead. He was not anxious for the position of councillor of the West ward if anybody else wanted it, but he was urged to remain in the field and he hoped to be elected.

Dr. Henry brought the meeting to a close by urging the citizens to adopt a good waterworks system. Mayor Walsh called out from the rear of the hall for the doctor to take some stock in the artesian well. Dr. Henry said he thought the project had been successful, but the mayor replied that the company would hoss us until they struck water. The doctor said he was glad to hear that the undertaking had not been abandoned. It was now 11 o'clock and Mayor Walsh suggested that the meeting be adjourned until Saturday evening. The suggestion was acted upon.

Nominations in the various townships took place on Monday and many interesting contests are said to have occurred. The following are the returns:

It is a neatly printed spicy four paged paper and looks as if it has come to stay. The Planet has THE SUN'S best wishes.

It is said that $200, not $250 as stated in THE SUN of last week, will repair Undertaker Hulse's hearse which was damaged at the funeral of the late John Sheets on Thursday Mr. H. has secured another hearse and will be able to attend funerals as usual.

LOST.—A silver ear-ring bearing monogram E. F. Finder kindly leave at THE SUN office and receive reward.

LA GRIPPE COMING AGAIN.—THE SUN's medical reporter is of the opinion that la grippe will again visit this part of the country and he says it will be more severe than the last time. Several cases are now in town, and the doctors are preparing for a great campaign.

THE GUN DIDN'T BURST.—A young lad named Wm. Hughson was out shooting the other day and injured his hand and a report was started to the effect that the gun exploded. The young fellow simply had his hand [illegible] and the [illegible] wound and the [illegible] almost again.

CHURCH.—The members of the Mission Aid Society [illegible] home in the [illegible] on the evening of Jan. 7, 1892, at 8 o'clock, and an interesting literary programme is expected. Admission, ten cents. All are invited.

MARRIAGE.—The marriage of Miss Mary Graham of this town, and Mr. William Phillips of Toronto was happily celebrated at the bride's residence, in the presence of a few friends. Rev. [illegible] and Miss Maggie [illegible] acted as [illegible] Phillips and happy couple [illegible]

[illegible] the rulers of [illegible] in stopping [illegible] town had a [illegible] the Brampton [illegible] would vote for Sunday cars. Some time ago the ministers requested the Orangeville council to protest against the C.P.R. running trains on Sunday, and the council have requested other towns on the line to join with them in getting legislation on the question. Here is what the council of Brampton did with it according to a local paper: "The town of Orangeville invited Brampton council to join them in a memorial to the Dominion government, asking that the C. P. R. be compelled to stop running trains on Sunday. The communication was shelved."

[illegible] Hughes [illegible] Opera Company played to fair audiences in the town hall on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. The "Queen of Hearts" was on the boards the first night and "Rose Lyons" the second evening. Miss Townsend is the best actress that has ever visited this town, and should she ever return a crowded house is guaranteed.

GREAT TALENT COMING.—Sara Lord Bailey, the renowned American dramatic reader, has been engaged by the Citizens' band to give a number of selections in the town hall on Wednesday evening, Jan'y 6. This lady is without doubt the greatest dramatic reader on the continent, and those who fail to hear her may never have another opportunity of hearing so gifted a lady. Admission, 25 and 35 cts. See programs.

WEDDING AT ALTON.—Miss Ellen Constance, daughter of Mr. B. Ward of Alton, was united in marriage to Mr. J. F. Harper, of the Bank of Hamilton, Hamilton, formerly of this town, on Thursday morning, the 24th. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father McPhillips of this town, in the presence of a few invited guests. The presents were numerous and beautiful. Mr. and Mrs. Harper left on the morning train for Hamilton, where they will reside.

SPEAKING THROUGH A TELEPHONE.—There is only one way to speak through a telephone. That way is to stand just a little back and speak in an ordinary tone, as if you were talking to a man a couple of feet away instead of one or two miles away over a wire. Don't yell, don't whisper; simply speak in an ordinary tone and distinctly. The words are carried by electricity, not by the force of your enunciation. The instrument is not like a deaf man, but, on the other hand, is extremely sensitive.

THE WAY THEY'LL DO IT.—The Barrie Advance thus talks to delinquent subscribers: "Our long suffering has been abused, and our patience is exhausted. We therefore have resolved to offer at public sale all such accounts as are not settled by the last day of January, 1892. The names and amounts will be published some weeks before, so that any one who can see a bargain in the purchase can take advantage of it. Dead beating this office is played out."

NO FRIENDS LIKE THE OLD.—During the past week we had a pleasant visit from our old friend, Mr. Robt. Jackson, of Cardwell, who called in to renew his subscription to THE SUN for the thirty-second time. Mr. Jackson looks hale and hearty and will be able to cast many more Conservative votes in the old constituency of Cardwell. Messrs. Wm. Lee of Connor and Wm. McCullough of Amaranth station, both early subscribers to Dufferin's favorite journal, also dropped in and renewed their subscriptions for the coming year.

NEVER WILL LEARN.—An insane desire to hold back to the last moment the sale of grain seems to almost universally prevail among the farming community. If it is low they must wait till it is high, and when it is high they hold back till it gets higher. Instead of selling it out when it is a fair price and paying their debts or loaning the proceeds, as the case may be, they keep it in the granary until loss in weight, onslaught of rats and accumulated interest on unpaid accounts make and inroads on their little income. This year is no exception to the general rule. —Tottenham Sentinel.

CELEBRATING CHRISTMAS.—On Christmas evening a number of the "boys" got together and celebrated Christmas in a lively, though not novel, manner. All the gin shops were visited and the various grades of wine were thoroughly tested. Opinion differed on the excellence of the sparkling champagne, some of the "boys" declaring that it was manufactured from Rev. D. C. Hossack's marvellous recipe book, but in every case mine host declared that it was direct from the vineyards of France. The celebrating wound up some time Saturday morning.

TO MORROW EVENING.—The First avenue Methodist church Sunday school will hold their anniversary in the town hall to-morrow (New Year's) evening. The tea on this occasion will be something extra for the ladies, you know, they made special efforts to eclipse anything that has yet taken place. Nor is the musical portion of the program neglected. Mr Thos Wright has charge of this department and it is needless to say the children are well prepared for the task. The affair promises to be a tremendous success.

LAID UP.—There is quite a number of citizens confined to their homes at present, suffering from one complaint or another. Mr George Siggins, of the South ward, is ill with inflammation of the lungs, and Mr. Jno Hughes of the same division is recovering from a similar complaint. Mr. and Mrs Vanwyck, near the C. P. R. station, who were laid up for a long time with typhoid fever, are able to be around again. Mr. Hy. Longeway is suffering from an attack of rheumatism. A young daughter of Mr. John Huston, Third street, is seriously ill from the effects of diphtheria.

JACK SCOTT MARRIED.—Mr. John Scott, who was employed at the C. P. R. roundhouse here for a couple of years, has gone and done it since he went on the road in the capacity of a fireman. For some time past his headquarters were at Havelock and while there he met and became infatuated with a farmer's daughter. It was a case of love at first sight on both sides, but at what time the ceremony took place is not known. The bride's father presented her with an acre of ground and a large brick house. Jack's own railway friends, although taken by surprise, wish him and his bride every happiness.

THE MUSICIANS' GUIDE.—Every music teacher, student or music lover should have this volume. It contains 212 pages of valuable musical information, with full description of over 10,000 pieces of music and music books, biographical sketches of over 150 composers, with portraits and other illustrations. Also a choice selection of new vocal and instrumental music and other attractive features. Upon receipt of eight two cent stamps, to prepay postage, we will mail free, a copy of the Musicians' Guide, also a sample copy of Brainard's Musical World, containing $2.00 worth of new music and interesting reading matter. Address The S. Brainard's Sons Co., Chicago, Ill.

UNDER THE WHEELS!

Alex. Smith Narrowly Escapes Death at Caledon Station.

HIS LEFT LEG HORRIBLY CRUSHED!

And his Right Thigh Badly Broken—The Mangled Limb Amputated and the Patient will Recover.

A most unfortunate accident occurred at Caledon station last Thursday evening and one which Alex. Smith will remember until his dying day. Mr. Smith has been attending the collegiate institute at Collingwood and was on his way to spend Christmas with Mr. Gibson, who resides a few miles from Charleston. At Cardwell Junction it was necessary for the young man to take the C. P. R. for Caledon, which is the next station. He had a ticket for Caledon, but the name of the station was not called out by the brakeman and when the train, which consisted of nine crowded coaches, stopped at Caledon Smith was was not aware that he had reached his destination. Shortly after the train pulled out of the station yard Conductor Lewis came around to collect the tickets. He looked at the young man's ticket and saw it was for Caledon. He informed Smith that they had just passed the station, and as the train was not running fast he could jump off. Smith ran out to the platform and was descending the steps. He put his foot on the last one, but in the darkness thought there was another and in a moment more his left leg was drawn under the wheels and crushed in

A SHOCKING MANNER.

The steps of the next car hit him on the right thigh, breaking it badly, and knocking him clear off the track. This undoubtedly saved the young man's life, for he would have been on the rails and seven coaches would have passed over him. After the accident poor Smith was carried to Burrel's hotel and Dr. McFayden was summoned. Dr. T. H. Henry of this town was telegraphed for and drove down as rapidly as possible.

A consultation was held by the doctors and it was decided to amputate the mangled limb below the knee. The operation was performed and resulted very satisfactory.

Mr. Smith was a tall, well developed man of 30, and the sad accident which has befallen him is deeply regretted by all his friends. He taught school for three years at Credit Forks, leaving there about a year ago. At one time he was correspondent of THE SUN and in this capacity gained quite a reputation at the Forks. His parents reside at Ripley, near Lucknow, but have not been informed of the terrible accident that has overtaken their son. Several of Mr. Smith's brothers live in British Columbia and a married sister resides at Detroit. The latter was telegraphed for and is now at her brother's bedside.

The last reports received are that the young man is getting along as well as could be expected and the doctors are of the opinion that he will survive the shock.

DEATH OF MRS F. R. PARKER.—It is with feelings of regret and sadness that we chronicle the death of Mrs. F. R. Parker, (nee Miss Emily Island) which occurred early Sunday morning. It is less than two months ago that we announced the marriage of Mr. Parker and Miss Island, but the happy days are now turned into days of sorrow. The funeral of the young lady, who had just reached the age of 24 years, took place from her mother's residence, corner of Broadway and Second streets, on Monday afternoon to the Forest Lawn cemetery, a large number of friends following the remains to their last resting place. The bereaved relatives have our heartfelt sympathy in their sad affliction.

MASONIC INSTALLATION.—At the regular meeting of Harris lodge, No. 216, A. F. & A. M., held on Monday, the 28th inst., in the Masonic hall Orangeville, the following officers were duly installed by Rt. W Bro. J. C. Fox: Bro. Robt Irvine, W. M.; Bro. C. W. Sydie, S. W.; Bro. J. H. Hulse, J. W. Bro George Irwin, secretary; Bro. J. K. Decatur, treasurer; Bro. N. Gordon, chaplain; Bro. C. M. Smith, S. D; Bro. H. D. Fraser, J. D; Bro A. Sutherland, D of C.; Bro. D. Coleman, Bro. F. R. Parker, stewards; Bro. J. J. White, I. G.; Bro. D. Dick, tyler. The ceremony being concluded the brethren wended their way to the refreshment room, where a very nice supper awaited them. After doing ample to the good things provided the brethren separated, much pleased with the evening's proceedings.

ROWDYISM ON BROADWAY.—On Christmas night a disgraceful fight took place at the corner of Broadway and Mill streets between a local tough and a rake from the country. The latter had a bottle of whiskey which the former was anxious to secure, and this was the cause of the disturbance. The townsman chased the country cad on the road, which was very muddy at the time, and felled him to the ground with a pug on the face. While the fellow was lying on the ground the other coon gave him three or four kicks that, to those who were looking on, seemed to dislodge his ribs, but he arose and gave vent to his feelings in curses long and deep. Chief Shields was at the town hall, of which he is caretaker, and it was earlier than Patrolman Parkin goes on duty, consequently the fighters were free from police interference. It would be a good idea for the council to arrange with the patrolman to go on duty a couple of hours earlier when the chief's presence is required at the hall. At all events such disgraceful encounters must be prohibited.

HOCKLEY.

THOSE UNWELL.—Mrs. J. B. Lindsey, is, we are sorry to say, very ill... Mrs. W. Walker is laid up with sickness.

ENTERPRISING.—Messrs. W. J. Stinson and R. J. Wilson have a new grain crushing machine in operation at Belfasey. Success to the boys!

DANCING PARTY.—A number of the boys and girls were invited to spend Tuesday evening at the residence of Mr. John Rainey, and a good number were present and a very enjoyable evening was spent by all in dancing and other amusements.

AMARANTH.

LOST.—A silver carving heating monogram E. F. Finder kindly leave at THE SUN office and receive reward.

LA GRIPPE COMING AGAIN.—THE SUN understands a reporter is of the opinion that la grippe will again visit this part of the country and he says it will be more severe than the last time. Several cases are in town and the doctors are preparing for a great campaign.

Here is what the council of Brampton did with it according to a local paper: "The town of Orangeville invited Brampton council to join them in a memorial to the Dominion government, asking that the C. P. R. be compelled to stop running trains on Sunday. The communication was shelved."

J. F. Harper, of the Bank of Hamilton, Hamilton, formerly of this town, on Thursday morning, the 24th. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father McPhillips of this town, in the presence of a few invited guests. The presents were numerous and beautiful. Mr. and Mrs. Harper left on the morning train for Hamilton, where they will reside.

SPEAKING THROUGH A TELEPHONE.—There is only one way to speak through a telephone. That way is to stand just a little back and speak in an ordinary tone, as if you were talking to a man a couple of feet away instead of one or two miles away over a wire. Don't yell, don't whisper; simply speak in an ordinary tone and distinctly. The words are carried by electricity, not by the force of your enunciation. The instrument is not like a deaf man, but, on the other hand, is extremely sensitive.

THE WAY THEY'LL DO IT.—The Barrie Advance thus talks to delinquent subscribers: "Our long suffering has been abused, and our patience is exhausted. We therefore have resolved to offer at public sale all such accounts as are not settled by the last day of January, 1892." The names and amounts will be published some weeks before, so that any one who can see a bargain in the purchase can take advantage of it. Dead beating this office is played out."

NO FRIENDS LIKE THE OLD.—During the past week we had a pleasant visit from our old friend, Mr. Robt. Jackson, of Cardwell, who called in to renew his subscription to THE SUN for the thirty-second time. Mr. Jackson looks hale and hearty and will be able to cast many more Conservative votes in the old constituency of Cardwell. Messrs. Wm. Leo of Connor and Wm. McCullough of Amaranth station, both early subscribers to Dufferin's favorite journal, also dropped in and renewed their subscriptions for the coming year.

NEVER WILL LEARN.—An insane desire to hold back to the last moment the sale of grain seems to almost universally prevail among the farming community. If it is low they must wait till it gets high, and when it is high they hold back till it gets higher. Instead of shoving it out when it is a fair price and paying their debts or loaning the proceeds, as the case may be, they keep it in the granary until loss in weight, onslaught of rats and accumulated interest on unpaid accounts make sad inroads on their little income. This year is no exception to the general rule.—Tottenham Sentinel.

CELEBRATING CHRISTMAS.—On Christmas evening a number of the "boys" got together and celebrated Christmas in a lively, though not novel, manner. All the gin shops were visited and the various grades of wine were thoroughly tested. Opinion differed on the excellence of the sparkling champagne, some of the "boys" declaring that it was manufactured from Rev. D. C. Hossack's marvellous recipe-book, but in every case mine host declared that it was direct from the vineyards of France. The celebrating wound up some time Saturday morning.

TO-MORROW EVENING.—The First avenue Methodist church Sunday school will hold their anniversary in the town hall to-morrow (New Year's) evening. The tea on this occasion will be something extra for the ladies, you know, have made special efforts to eclipse anything that has yet taken place. Nor is the musical portion of the program neglected. Mr. Thos. Wright has charge of this department and it is needless to say the children are well prepared for the task. The affair promises to be a tremendous success.

LAID UP.—There is quite a number of citizens confined to their homes at present, suffering from one complaint or another. Mr George Siggins, of the South ward, is ill with inflammation of the lungs, and Mr. Jno Hughes of the same division is recovering from a similar complaint. Mr. and Mrs Vanwyck, near the C. P. R. station, who were laid up for a long time with typhoid fever, are able to be around again. Mr. Hy. Longeway is suffering from an attack of rheumatism. A young daughter of Mr. John Huston, Third street, is seriously ill from the effects of diphtheria.

JACK SCOTT MARRIED.—Mr. John Scott, who was employed at the C. P. R. roundhouse here for a couple of years, has gone and done it since he went on the road in the capacity of a fireman. For some time past his headquarters were at Havelock and while there he met and became infatuated with a farmer's daughter. It was a case of love at first sight on both sides, but at what time the ceremony took place is not known. The bride's father presented her with an acre of ground and a large brick house. Jack's own railway friends, although taken by surprise, wish him and his bride every happiness.

THE MUSICIANS' GUIDE.—Every music teacher, student or music lover should have this volume. It contains 212 pages of valuable musical information, with full description of over 10,000 pieces of music and music books, biographical sketches of over 150 composers, with portraits and other illustrations. Also a choice selection of new vocal and instrumental music and other attractive features. Upon receipt of eight two cent stamps, to prepay postage, we will mail free, a copy of the Musicians' Guide, also a sample copy of Brainard's Musical World, containing $2.00 worth of new music and interesting reading matter. Address The S. Brainard's Sons Co., Chicago, Ill.

FIRE INSURANCE.—If you want to be insured in the strongest and best companies in Canada, call on F. Irwin, over Endacott's store.

... have the C. P. R. for Caledon, while in the next station. He had a ticket for Caledon, but the name of the station was not called out by the brakeman and when the train, which consisted of nine crowded coaches, stopped at Caledon Smith was was not aware that he had reached his destination. Shortly after the train pulled out of the station yard Conductor Boyle came around to collect the tickets. He looked at the young man's ticket and saw it was for Caledon. He informed Smith that they had just passed the station, and as the train was not running fast he could jump off. Smith ran out to the platform and was descending the steps. He put his foot on the last one, but in the darkness thought there was another and in a moment more his left leg was drawn under the wheels and crushed in

A SHOCKING MANNER.

The steps of the next car hit him on the right thigh, breaking it badly, and knocking him clear off the track. This undoubtedly saved the young man's life, for he would have been on the rails and seven coaches would have passed over him." After the accident poor Smith was carried to Burrel's hotel and Dr. McFayden was summoned. Dr. T. H. Henry of this town was telegraphed for and drove down as rapidly as possible.

A consultation was held by the doctors and it was decided to amputate the mangled limb below the knee. The operation was performed and resulted very satisfactory.

Mr. Smith was a tall, well developed man of 30, and the sad accident which has befallen him is deeply regretted by all his friends. He taught school for three years at Credit Forks, leaving there about a year ago. At one time he was correspondent of THE SUN and in this capacity gained quite a reputation at the Forks. His parents reside at Ripley, near Lucknow, but have not been informed of the terrible accident that has overtaken their son. Several of Mr. Smith's brothers live in British Columbia and a married sister resides at Detroit. The latter was telegraphed for and is now at her brother's bedside.

The last reports received are that the young man is getting along as well as could be expected and the doctors are of the opinion that he will survive the shock.

DEATH OF MRS E. R. PARKER.—It is with feelings of regret and sadness that we chronicle the death of Mrs. E. R. Parker, (nee Miss Emily Island) which occurred early Sunday morning. It is less than two months ago that we announced the marriage of Mr. Parker and Miss Island, but the happy days are now turned into days of sorrow. The funeral of the young lady, who had just reached the age of 24 years, took place from her mother's residence, corner of Broadway and Second streets, on Monday afternoon to the Forest Lawn cemetery, a large number of friends following the remains to their last resting place. The bereaved relatives have our heartfelt sympathy in their sad affliction.

MASONIC INSTALLATION.—At the regular meeting of Harris lodge, No. 216, A. F. & A. M., held on Monday, the 28th inst., in the Masonic hall Orangeville, the following officers were duly installed by Rt. W. Bro. J. C. Fox: Bro. Robt Irvine, W. M.; Bro. C. W. Sydie, S. W.; Bro. J. H. Bulse, J. W. Bro. George Irwin, secretary; Bro. J. K. Decatur, treasurer; Bro. N. Gordon, chaplain; Bro. C. M. Smith, S. D; Bro. H. D. Fraser, J. D; Bro. A. Sutherland, D. of C.; Bro. D. Coleman, Bro. F. R. Parker, stewards; Bro. J. J. White, I. G; Bro. D. Dick, tyler. The ceremony being concluded the brethren wended their way to the refreshment room, where a very nice supper awaited them. After doing ample to the good things provided the brethren separated, much pleased with the evening's proceedings.

ROWDYISM ON BROADWAY.—On Christmas night a disgraceful fight took place at the corner of Broadway and Mill streets between a local tough and a rake from the country. The latter had a bottle of whiskey which the former was anxious to secure, and this was the cause of the disturbance. The townfough chased the country cad on the road, which was very muddy at the time, and felled him to the ground with a pug on the face. While the fellow was lying on the ground the other coon gave him three or four kicks that, to those who were looking on, seemed to dislodge his ribs, but he arose and gave vent to his feelings in curses long and deep. Chief Shields was at the town hall, of which he is caretaker, and it was earlier than Patrolman Parkin goes on duty, consequently the fighters were free from police interference. It would be a good idea for the council to arrange with the patrolman to go on duty a couple of hours earlier when the chief's presence is required at the hall. At all events such disgraceful encounters must be prohibited.

HOCKLEY.

DANCING PARTY.—A number of the boys and girls were invited to spend Tuesday evening at the residence of Mr. John Rainey, and a good number were present and a very enjoyable evening was spent by all in dancing and other amusements.

AMARANTH.

THE CHRISTMAS PEAL.

Swinging across the belfry tower
The bells sway backward all the hour;
They sang, they roared, they rushed, they roared;
Their tongues transitionous music poured.
The old walls rocked and peals outswept,
Far up the deep their echoes leapt,
Soaring and sparkling till they burst
Like bubbles round the topmost horn
That reddens to the first of morn
That hails some trembling star the first,
And all the realms of ice and frost
From field to field those joy bells tost,
They swelled from their airy height;
They thrilled; they loosed their bands for fight
They knew that it was Christmas night!

Where awful absences of sound
The gorge in death's dumb rigour bound,
Below and deep with the wood.
Windless and weird the black pine stood.
The iron boughs swayed far and wide;
They heard the cry along the height;
They pulsed in tune of that glad flight;
They knew that it was Christmas night!

You who with quickening throbs shall mark
Such swells and falls swim on the dark,
As crisp as if the clustered rout
In starry depths sprang chiming out,
As if the Pleiades should sing,
Lyra should touch her tenderest string,
Aldebaran his spear heads clang,
Great Betelgeuse and Sirius blow
Their mighty horns, and Fomalhaut
With wild sweet breath suspended hang.—
Know 'tis your heart-beats, with those bells,
Loosen the snow clouds' vibrant cells,
Stir the vast forest on the height,
Your heart-beats answering to the light
Flashed earthward the first Christmas night!

The Story Teller.

OLIVE VARCOE

—OR—

TRUE TO THE LAST.

CHAPTER XXVI. (Continued).

"I am glad of that," said Olive. "Tell her from me that I have spared her all I can; and say the child, the little Olive Varcoe she was kind to, is sorry that, in her wilfulness, she often seemed ungrateful; but she was never so; it was all words—wild, wicked words—the meaning of which was never in her heart.

"I will give her your message, Olive," returned Sir Hilton.

He looked at her wistfully, with words on his lips that he dared not utter. She had fallen back exhausted, and, but for the tears on her cheeks, he might have deemed her dead, so marble white was the once radiant, flushing face

"Olive!" he said, gently.

She started, and opening her eyes, looked at him a little wildly.

"I am weak and tired," she said, pressing her hand on her head. "You must leave me, Sir Hilton. You promised Florian in the drawing-room."

This was the first time in all his life that Olive Varcoe had asked him to and the request came upon him with a strange chill. But if was right he could go; it was time, indeed, the painful and final parting was over. He rose and, gazing at her with sad eyes, vowed that she would hold out her hand. "I would not refuse to take it," he said to himself. "No, I could not."

But Olive made no sign of asking from him such a mark of kindness, and save in sleep, she had not once called him by his name.

"Good-by, Olive," he said sorrowfully.

"Farewell, Sir Hilton," she returned. His voice was firm, though low and sad. He still lingered, and, with face averted, he spoke in a trembling voice.

"You said he, "you left yourself without resources, when you so contemptuously refused my aid, and repaid me as you did. It—the cost of your freedom—was a cruel thing to do—cruel, more cruel to me than to you have had aid from me.

"Vigo!" from Mr. Vigo," interrupted she. "No, I could not permit him to maintain me. I have work.

"Work!" said Sir Hilton, and his face he looked at the little frail figure and talked thus.

"Yes," replied, "I taught English,

"Have wanted for nothing. I you had money during five?" continued Sir Hilton, his voice trembled painfully

"No money," replied Olive the poor woman who kept attic to mine was I should have wanted her And then a lady was very good"

"Strangers!" exclaimed Sir for her words wrung his the core "And you from strangers! Olive, surely you will let Lady you——"

"Oh!" said Olive interrupting spreading her hands a kind of terror, "I Trewavas bounty. No Trewavas shall ever touch die first"

"To whom she had all her life—a home, position, all the heard her, and bowed sorrow. He saw face of his house would nothing

"You—you fear to vex Mr. Vigo, perhaps," he said, bitterly, "in accepting from me what you would not take from him. But it is not I who venture to ask you this favor; it is your aunt, Lady Trewavas"

"I shall never vex Charles Vigo by what I do," said Olive. "I can take nothing from any one whose name is Trewavas, whether that person be aunt or cousin."

"Then what will you do?" cried Sir Hilton, vehemently.

"I can work when I am well," she replied.

Sir Hilton looked at the white face, the fragile figure of the little creature who said this, and strove in vain to quench the smart of tears in his eyes.

"It will be long before you are well, Olive," he expostulated.

The anxiety and gentleness of his tone seemed only to irritate Olive, and she said, coldly:

"Do not fear for me, Sir Hilton—think of others who need your care, better than I do."

Then the fire and fortress of her nature burst through her reticence, and she cried out, with all her old vehemence:

"Go back to Trewavas, Sir Hilton, and stand by grandmother's side. The aged have more need of consolation than the young. I ask nothing, I want nothing at your hands; the time for that is past. This meeting was as desired by me. It is Mrs. Langley who wishes to see you. I am weak and weary. Leave me, I entreat you."

She pointed to the door, and then, without another look, she closed her eyes, as though their interview was over, and she was now striving to rest.

"I have had too much of the pity," she said to herself, bitterly. "Sorry though he may be for the past, he still deems me infinitely beneath him in all things, even in innocence. Like the scape-goat in the wilderness, all this sin is laid upon my head; and he thinks himself merciful, because I am only driven forth into the deserts to die."

Good Advice.

DEAR SIRS,—I have been troubled with headache for over 40 years, and had it so bad about once a week that I was sometimes not expected to live. I was advised to use B. B. B., and have used 3 bottles. I now have an attack only once in four or five months, and feel that if I continue using it I will be entirely cured. Therefore I recommend it highly

MRS. E. A. STOREY, Shetland, Ont.

SHELBURNE.

(From Press and Economist.)

GONE HOME.—Mr. Geo. Trewin, who met with an accident on Thanksgiving day, thereby breaking his knee cap, has so far recovered that he proceeded to his home at Oshawa on Monday.

FOR MANITOBA.—Mr. John Hodson started for Manitoba yesterday with a car load of horses. John will miss both the nomination and election. For the present he has had his fill of municipal honors.

GETTING LIVELY.—Municipal matters are beginning to get lively in Melsonthon. Mr. Fred Story is one of the new candidates for the council. If elected Mr. Story will make a good representative. It is rumored that Mr H. H. Walker has a municipal bee in his hat. What he intends running for we have not heard. We are informed that a number of new men will be candidates, but have not heard their names.

MARRIAGE.—Quite a number of friends and guests assembled at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Munn on Tuesday last to witness the marriage of Miss Martha Curry to Mr. Samuel Watson, of West Toronto Junction. Rev. H. W. McTavish performed the ceremony. The groom was assisted by Mr. Geo. Wilkinson, of Toronto, and the bridesmaids were Miss Minnie Munn and Miss Tipping. The happy couple left Shelburne by the evening train.

BY INVITATION.

Mrs. Monks—Why didn't you come to dinner?"

Small Son—I had my dinner, ma. I took dinner with Willie Minks."

"Did Mrs. Minks invite you?"

"Yes, ma. I smelled apple dumplings cooking, and I told her I liked apple dumplings awful!"

"Oh, you did?"

"Yes'm. Then she said maybe if I went home I'd find you had apple dumplings for dinner, too."

"Hump!"

"Yes'm. But I told her yours was always so heavy pa wouldn't let me eat any, an' then she invited me to sit down."

A Change For The Better.

SIRS,—I have taken three bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters and find it a splendid medicine for constipation and poor appetite. I will continue taking it as it is a great blessing and I feel a great change in my health since taking it.

DON'T FORGET!

Hall has cured by the present use of Ayer's Pills. Thousands by timely use now are liable to consumption, or other disorganizations of the stomach and bowels which, if neglected, lead to serious and often fatal consequences. The most mild means of correcting these ills is the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills. The prudent sufferer never would be seen go to sea without an chronometer as without a supply of these Pills. Though prompt and energetic in operation, Ayer's Pills have no ill effects; they are purely vegetable and sugar-coated; the safest medicine for old and young, at home or abroad.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels resumed their natural and regular action, so that now I am in health."—Mrs. C. B. Clark, Tewksbury, Massachusetts.

"I regard Ayer's Pills as one of the most reliable general remedies of our times. They have been in use in my family for affections requiring a purgative, and have given unvarying satisfaction. We have found them an excellent remedy for colds and light fevers."—W. E. Woodson, Fort Worth, Texas.

"For several years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than upon anything else in the medicine chest, to regulate my bowels and those of the ship's crew. These Pills are not severe in their action, but do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect for the cure of rheumatism, kidney troubles, and dyspepsia."—Capt. Mueller, Steamship Pollux, New York City.

"I have found Ayer's Cathartic Pills to be a better family medicine for common use than any other pills within my knowledge. They are not only very effective, but safe and pleasant to take—qualities which must make them valued by the public."—Jules Hazel, Perfumer, Philadelphia, Pa.

What is it that makes all those men who associate habitually with women superior to those who do not? What makes that women who is accustomed and at ease in the society of men superior to her sex in general? Solely because they are in the habit of free, graceful, continued conversation with the other sex. Women, in this way, lose their frivolity, their fan-like awaken, their delicacies and peculiarities unfold all their beauty and captivation in the spirit of intellectual rivalry. And the men lose their pedantic, rule, declamatory, or sullen manner. The coin of the understanding and the heart changes continually. Their asperities are rubbed off, their better materials polished and their richness, like the gold, is wrought into finer workmanship by the fingers of women than it ever could be by those of men. The iron and steel of their characters are hidden, like the armor of a giant, by studs and knots of precious stones, when they are wanted in actual warfare.

The Rest of Rock Salt, for Stock.

Read what Prof Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says regarding proper ways of salting stock:—"Dairy cattle should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has convinced me that when cows are denied salt for a period of even one week they will yield from 1½ to 2½ per cent. less milk, and that of an inferior quality. Such milk will on an average, take a loss of 12 twenty-four ounces less time than milk drawn from the same or similar cows receiving salt every day, all other conditions of treatment being equal."

THE NEW YEAR.

The year dies away,
And softly o'er the sod
Another comes with outstretched hands,
Whose face we do not know;
Yet must we rise and walk with him
Wherever he may go.

Perhaps through valleys deep and dark,
Perhaps by sunny rills
O'er rough and thorny mountain sides,
Or pleasant sloping hills.
The stranger closely grasps our hands,
And leads us where he wills.

But high above the passing years
We know the Lord is King,
And every day of all the months
Some gift from him shall bring;
We trust him and are not afraid
The while his lays we sing.

He never has forgotten us!
The story of the years
Is full of his great goodness
Through all our hopes and fears;
And he will bless us every day,
And wipe away our tears.

After the darkness comes the dawn,
And though the past was sad,
The sunshine will break forth again,
And all the world be glad;
Where death has been, the flowers shall bloom,
In summer beauty clad.

And as we lift our eyes to thee,
O thou who changest not;
Then keepest us within thy heart—
We shall not be forgot;
And light from thee shall bless the way,
Whate'er our earthly lot.

We thank thee for thy tenderness;
We praise thee for thy grace;
We fear not anything that comes
Before we see thy face.
Lead thou us yet another year
Nearer thy fair home place.

The Story Teller.

OLIVE VARCOE

—OR—

TRUE TO THE LAST.

CHAPTER XXVI. (Continued).

She did not weep as she thought of this, but there grew over her white face a shadow of disdainful pity for his pride; and Sir Hilton saw it, and wondered. It seemed to him that they had changed places, and she was the accuser now, while she stood humbled and abashed, before her; she was no longer the wilful, petted child, or the passionate girl, whose humble, caressing tenderness he had first encouraged, then rejected. No, she was a woman now, chastened and subdued—by a sense of guilt, he thought—and prouder and colder in her repentance than he would have deemed it possible that the fiery and loving Olive Varcoe could ever be. Then it was so strange that she should be cold to him—to him who had insulted and forsaken her, and deemed her guilty; yes, strange, indeed, that the love that from boyhood, in all its wild devotion, had ever been his, could at last grow weary, and fade away. Was this pale icicle really Olive—the Olive who had loved him so dangerously and deeply, and whom he had dreamed of so often as weeping at his feet? He had thought of her as loving Charles Vigo, but his first glimpse of her face made him forget that; now it came back to him bitterly, and he turned in anger to the door.

"Farewell, Miss Varcoe," said he. "You desire me to leave you, and I go. I have no right to ask you why you are here, or under what circumstances. I presume your conscience exonerates you from wishing to bring trouble on this house, and that is enough. You know best whether you ought to seek an asylum here, Mrs Langley being a widow and blind."

"Blind!" repeated Olive, mournfully; "ah, blind, blind, blind! Go, Sir Hilton; go, before I say something that will kill you as you stand."

In the school of adversity Olive had learned to discipline her soul; so this was the only bitterness to which she gave vent, in return for his cruel words. If he wondered at her speech, he had no time to answer it, for the door opened, and Herbert Langley entered, followed by Chadwick and Damerel.

"Miss Vansittart," said Herbert Langley, approaching her with deep respect, "I trust you will forgive me for intruding on you, but I am anxious to introduce to you a friend of mine, who is bent on believing that you are not yourself. Allow me to make known to you Mr. Vivian Damerel."

Olive half rose and bowed, with her large eyes fixed on the cold face of the man who had always looked on her with suspicion. He was as pale as death, and his firm set lips looked cruel in their contempt and scorn. He had fancied she would not dare to meet his glances, but she did so firmly, sadly, calmly; and his eyes were the first that fell. Neither of them spoke a word. Not noticing this, Herbert Langley eagerly introduced Chadwick, who rattled on in his usual way.

"You are scarcely strong enough to bear our presence, Miss Vansittart," said Herbert Langley, apologetically; "but my anxiety to introduce Mr. Damerel to you must be my excuse. Trewavas, how came you here?"

"I came to see Miss Langley," replied Sir Hilton, in somewhat embarrassment.

"And here she is!" exclaimed Chadwick.

Florian seemed much agitated; she was flushed, and trembling. She held a letter in her hand.

"Herbert," she said, eagerly, as she bowed to the three gentlemen who greeted her, "I want to speak to you."

"One thing at a time, Flo, if you please," said her brother, putting her aside. "Let me finish this affair with Mr. Damerel first. Damerel," he continued, "here is my hand—take it, if you can say you are sorry for the mistake that has caused so much trouble."

Vivian Damerel looked at Florian—he wanted to make her understand that what he did, he did for her sake; but she kept her head turned away as she bent over Olive anxiously.

"If I have given you or Miss Langley trouble, I am sorry for it," said Vivian evasively.

"But now you have seen Miss Vansittart," persisted Herbert, "you are of course willing to acknowledge that your suspicions, whatever they were, were groundless."

Olive would have spoken here, but Florian pressed her hand earnestly, and she kept silent.

"Miss Langley," said Vivian, turning to her suddenly, "if I saw you wheeling some dangerous creature, would it be right or wrong to warn your friends of it?"

Sir Hilton, very pale, took a step nearer to Olive, as if to protect her; but Herbert Langley, at Vivian's question, broke into fury.

"What!" he cried. "Do you dare still to question my honor and truth? Florian—Miss Vansittart—this man insults you both.

Restraining his passion, Damerel answered in his coldest tones:

"I see no necessity for a quarrel, Langley. If your sister will say this young lady is Miss Vansittart, I will say the same, and acknowledge that I was deluded by a likeness, not so great in illness now as it was some months ago.

"Speak Flo!" cried her brother vehemently.

Florian saw that Vivian Damerel was resolved to lay her under a personal obligation to himself. To gain her gratitude he would tell this falsehood, but not else; he would tell it as a favor to her, or he would speak the truth. Again pressing one hand on Olive's shoulder to implore her silence, she stretched the other towards Damerel.

"Read this letter, Mr. Damerel, without making one comment on it," she said. "When you have finished it, I will answer you."

Her earnest manner, her grave look, commanded attention, and even Herbert let her have her own way in silence. Still, with that sad pitiful shadow on her face, she turned to Sir Hilton Trewavas.

"Sir Hilton, three days ago I promised you news of your brother," she said. "I give it now. I heard to day, by a sure hand, that he is still at Trewavas, ill—perhaps dying—"

Olive would have started up, but Florian's firm hand still held her, and that nervous grasp still entreated her to have patience, and be silent.

"And I think you will find a telegram at your house, imploring your instant return," concluded Florian.

"Thank Heaven, poor John is at least at home!" said Sir Hilton, with pale lips; "what a comfort that he is found."

No one echoed this. Vivian Damerel with the face of one who has seen a great horror, had that instant restored the letter to Florian, and he now stood leaning against the chimney-piece, pale, agitated, and silent.

"Here is Mrs. Langley coming up stairs," said Dick Chadwick in surprise. Feeling himself de trop, he had stood in the doorway, whence he commanded a view of the staircase.

"My mother!" exclaimed Herbert in dismay. Then he hurried towards Olive, saying excitedly, "Miss Vansittart, do not speak while she is here, I entreat you. She is not aware you are arrived, and she is very nervous. If you are silent she will know nothing till we tell her to-morrow."

Olive turned and looked reproachfully at Florian, but there was no time for words, as the blind lady at this moment entered the room, leaning on the arm of a servant, who quitted her, as her son stretched out his hand and took hers.

"Who is here?" asked Mrs. Langley anxiously.

"I," returned Sir Hilton, quickly. He divined that Olive was here against the blind lady's will, and this further deceit pained and galled him; so, although he felt that he ought to go at once to his hotel, his anxiety made him linger.

"Sir Hilton," said Mrs Langley, taking his hand in hers, which trembled, "I feel for you with my whole heart. Do you go on this sad journey alone?" she asked, and that sorrowful shadow of pity stood more visibly on her blind face than in Florian's tearful eyes.

"I go alone," he replied, a little wonderingly.

"Not alone, Trewavas," said Damerel, in a husky voice. "I will go with you."

"Mr. Damerel," said the blind lady, "you are kind in that offer; yes, go with him. And Mr. Chadwick, you will accompany us? We return to England instantly."

"Damerel heard this request, and yet he did not repent of his proposal to accompany Sir Hilton. The sup pressed excitement in his face and manner checked the exuberant flow of thanks with which Chadwick accepted Mrs. Langley's proposition. Herbert, however, uninfluenced by the silent fever in the hearts around him, exclaimed, in a vexed tone, that he saw no reason for such a sudden move; but his mother interrupted his speech.

"Who is here?" she said, uneasily. "Florian, what lady is here besides yourself?"

"Oh, mother, what nonsense!" cried Herbert. But his mother turned on him angrily.

"Children," she exclaimed, "do you take advantage of my blindness to deceive me?"

Her sorrowful voice pierced Sir Hilton's ear like a knell. What would anyone, who knew the proscription it was she felt so painfully? Vivian Damerel, still pale, still excited, looked at Florian, and her eyes plainly answered back, Speak!

"Mrs. Langley," he said, in a clear, low voice, "it is Miss Vansittart who is here."

As he uttered this, Olive flung back Florian's restraining hand and rose hurriedly.

"There is no Miss Vansittart here," she said, in a sad, unfaltering tone. "Mrs. Langley, I am Olive Varcoe."

Herbert Langley heard this; and, in amazement, and pale as death, he rushed towards his sister, and crushed her from Olive's side.

"Are you mad, Florian?" he cried, in fury. "What villainy is this? And you, girl, how have you dared obey my mother and sister, and contaminate their roof with your terrible presence?"

As he spoke thus to Olive, he saw his blind mother seek her way gropingly towards that pale, shrinking figure, and clasp her in her arms, while her face streamed with pears.

"Mother!" he exclaimed in horror.

"Read this," said Florian, in a whisper, putting the letter in his hand. "It is from Mrs. Gensing. "She is married to Trewavas. "Read it, and be silent. Mother received it this morning. It crushed her so much that I determined to tell her Olive was here."

As she was saying this, Herbert half read, half listened, and now upon his face, too, there was that shadow of pity which still rested pale and quiet on Vivian Damerel.

Olive Varcoe was weeping bitterly, while her small, trembling figure was held up by Mrs. Langley's supporting arm.

"Sir Hilton," she said, turning her blind face towards him in the deepest pity, "you must not linger here. Say farewell to this poor distressed child, and leave us."

Stricken by amazement, and feeling as though a cold hand had been laid upon his heart, and yet blind, still blind to the bitter truth, Sir Hilton advanced towards her.

"Farewell, Mrs. Langley. Farewell, Olive," he said, softly.

"Take her hand," whispered Mrs. Langley. "She has been fearfully faithful to you, Sir Hilton."

Blindly wondering still, and thinking her love had indeed been fearful, he would in pity, have taken Olive's small pale hand, which Mrs. Langley strove to place in his; but Olive drew it away quickly, and, suppressing her sobs, she said, hastily, "May heaven help you, Hilton! Tell John from me—but no, my grief is past speech;" and clasping her arms round Mrs. Langley, she hid her face, while sobs choked her words.

"Take him away quickly," whispered Florian to Damerel; "and be merciful to him. Utter not a word of this on the journey. He will hear it best from Lady Trewavas's lips."

"I will obey you," said Vivian, taking her hand. "Oh, Florian! when shall we meet again?"

"Soon!" she replied, hastily. "We are going to Rosrigo with Olive."

"Rosrigo!" he reiterated, in surprise. "Then you will see Charles Vigo, once my friend—the noblest fellow on earth. Ah, Miss Langley, get him to forgive me, if you can. I might have known such a heart as his could not err," and he glanced at Olive. "You know he loves her."

"I know it," she replied. "Go, pray go; Olive is too weak for this agitation."

She was so pale, so agitated herself, that Vivian Damerel hastened to obey her. He made his adieu quickly to all, bowing to Olive as to a queen; then he took Sir Hilton's arm, and led him away. And Sir Hilton, looking back, saw resting on every face that strange shadow of pity, the memory of which followed him through the thronged streets of Paris, and haunted his fevered thoughts, as he hurried on day and night in blindness to that awakening horror that awaited him beneath the grey roof of Trewavas.

BOWLING GREEN.

(Too late for last week.)

CHANGE OF TEACHERS.—Miss Peters' held her Christmas examinations last Monday, and it was largely attended. Next term Miss Peters teaches at Laurel and Miss Riley of Orangeville takes her place here.

LAID UP.—Israel Miller is laid up with an attack of inflammation of the bowles and his illness is looked on as serious. We earnestly hope to see him around again.

A SUCCESS.—Messrs. Burns and Hill had a great sale of farm stock and implements on Monday last. The day was fine and a large crowd came from both ways. After the sale a crowd of young folks clubbed together and soon a merry dance was well under way, about twenty-five couples taking part in it. The small, delicate feet of the ladies, and the great big ugly feet of the gents chased each other over the floor until 3 o'clock in the morning. R. Smith, J. Menary, and I. Whaley provided the music and W. Jelly, W. Bates and J. Banks acted as masters of ceremonies.

GLEE CLUB ORGANIZED.—A glee club has been organized here at last and we must thank THE SUN for kindly helping us to get up an organization of some kind. A meeting was held on Saturday evening and the proceedings went harmoniously on. The club will be a good place to pass the long winter nights and the benefit to the young people will repay any lost time. The following officers were elected: W. B. Jelly, sr., president; A. Rounding, vice president; W. Wansbrough, secretary; R. Edgar, assistant secretary; T. Garbutt, treasurer: Misses Bell Hughston, Bessie Driver, Ina Whaley, Messrs. W. Jelly, J. Lamb and J. Menary, program committee. Rules and regulations were approved by the club, and everything is in first class shape. We will send you an invitation, Mr. Editor, to be present at one of our meetings.

WE WANT TO KNOW

The best way to get news.

When and where the next dance will be.

If there is going to be any weddings around here this winter.

Who was it that could not drive through B. G. the other day without getting his sleigh upset.

If Eli Driver intends to run why he has not got his announcement in THE SUN.

Who went down the eighth line last Sunday night.

Where was Will.—Who did John go with.—Who went for a sleigh ride.

A Rosrigo drover broke panel of glass in stores windows to the value of $25 the other night.

On Friday night last the residence of Judge Scott on the "Crescent" was entered by thieves. The family were absent at the time and the house was therefore in sole possession of the intruders. A gun, the bair's dress suit, his collection of photos, besides other articles, are missing.—Brampton Banner.

The late John Finley, who failed in business at Port Stanley about the year 1878, and left the country, removed to Colorado Spring, Col., where he died some two or three years after, not having accomplished his fixed purpose of paying all his liabilities. He left to his widow the carrying out of his desires, which she has at last been able to do, having completed the payment of all claims against her late husband. The debts in all amounted to between $6,000 and $5,000.

A NEW YEAR'S GREETING.

"A HAPPY New Year my friend!"

"Oh, yes, risk something impossible for me, a grumpy old man with rheumatism in both legs—it's—it's—as cousin, tent. I may not even hobble out to see a sunrise, ugh—ugh—If your wishes could make me well!"

"There was once a man who lived without any legs. They were both cut off in a frightful accident. But every day of his life he thanked God that it had not been his head instead. Put that in your pipe, my rheumatic friend, and smoke it."

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

"Oh, yes, I am sure of it," and he turned feebly on the hospital cot at my invitation, "this will be the first New Year since I was a little child that I can look forward to with the certainty that it will be a happy one. Not a single fear, not a broken resolution, all my accounts squared, and the happy New Year of a new life opening before me! You will have your wish, friend!"

Ah, they are indeed fortunate who are called to enjoy Heaven's long holiday of bliss. In the light of that dawning day, there are no shadows—an eternal New Year!

A HAPPY NEW YEAR!

"What for?"

"Gimme suthin to eat!"

"Aint you a little premature, friend?"

"Have you a nickel for a drink?"

Down in the slums among the out casts reeking with the mire and mirk of degradation, fighting, profane, yet made in his likeness, and by nature's inherent right, my one brothers and sisters. Come with me friends. There are homes to feed you, parents to clothe you, churches to save your precious souls, schools to teach you—come. No need of any one being poor or lost or unhappy at the door of our organized charities. You have only to ask and ye shall receive—a happy New Year.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

"What! Wish us a happy New Year in prison walls? The law has pronounced us felons, and separated us from our families and our fellow men. Have you come here to mock us, and jeer at our misfortunes?"

"Not so, brothers. We have all sinned and gone astray, and broken the divine law."

An angel came to St. Paul in prison. The pious monk of old voluntarily immured himself in a cell that he might become by prayer and fasting more fit for his blessed Master's service. Here your physical life is restrained, that your soul may climb the steps of moral progress. Make of your prison walls heights to scale, from whose summit you may reach Heaven! The first rung in your ladder—a happy New Year.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR, SISTER!

"Who calls me sister? I have no sister. No woman dare take me by the hand. Yet I had a sister once. She passes me in the street and knows me not. She tells her friends that I am dead. What has one like me to do with happy New Years?"

"Sister, step by step, leads bad to good. Lose your dark yesterdays in beautiful to morrow's. The garb of the penitent is a saintly one. The best women have worn it—if not outwardly, in their closet. This scale of yearhood, this stepping stone from whence you may behold the dawn, is where you shall have power to choose the road you will take. Make it in truth a New Year of the soul."

A HAPPY NEW YEAR, MOURNERS!

"Oh, cruel mockery, to wish a happy New Year to one who sits by the grave of lost beloveds, who listens and waits for the step that will never come, whose heart is buried in the dust of renunciation. Wish rather that the New Year may never dawn for me, since the lips I loved are sealed to all eternity.

"And are there no beloveds left, selfish mourner? It is not given to all to have loved and lost. The priceless dower of memory which such love bequeaths should be blessedness enough for any human soul. Give of your ineffable riches to those who have lost and never loved. Keep in touch with lives that have not had this sweet selfish sorrow to nurse and comfort them. It is your own shadow, poor mourner, that stands between you and the New Year."

A happy New Year, brothers and sisters! We do not need to be in church, or on our knees when the New Year comes, though that is one of the dear old customs, but suppose we stop just where we are, and say it to everybody within reach, giving them a send-off in our hearts that shall project into their future like the mind cure with healing power. And if I have an enemy in the world, or there is one whom I have harmed, I hope he will wish me as hearty a Happy New Year as I do him or her. And my friends, who read these words, I shall feel your wish, and it will thrill me with a new hope and prove better than charms or incantations or lucky horseshoes, to carry me safely through the mystic portal from the three fold of which I stretch out loving hands, wishing you all a Happy New Year.

"The year that for us waits
Beyond to-morrow's mystic gates."

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—The combined effects of over-crowding, sedentary occupations and monotony of life are only too well known to those who have to pass the best part of their lives labouring in foetid and crowded work rooms. The compulsory confinement weakens the general health and induces chronic constipation, indigestion, and various forms of skin diseases. Holloway's remedies are of priceless value to persons of this class, for they can be used without entailing loss of work, being purely vegetable in their composition, and consequently act without harshness on the most delicate system. The experience of more than fifty years proves that no means surpass Holloway's remedies for curing bad legs, bad breasts, piles, and wounds of all kinds.

At Brampton yesterday a 4-year old child of Mr. William Burrows, who had been left alone in the house, was seen running from the premises this after noon enveloped in flames. A gentleman passing succeeded in smothering the flames with his overcoat, but the babe will die. It is supposed the little chap had been playing with fire.

Paraffine Family Friend!

The family store of medicine should contain a bottle of Hagyard's Yellow Oil. Mrs. Hannah Hutchins, of Bonnevy, N.S., says: "We have used Hagyard's Yellow Oil in our family for six years, for scratches, colds, burns, sore throat, croup, etc., and find it so good we cannot do without it."

A STORY OF THE MONTHS.

The old year had just come with his twelve sons and daughters. His eldest child was January, and his youngest May. January was now washing off the earth, a grim old fellow, dressed in sheets of pure, dazzling snow. Slowly he passed away, not to come again for a long time, and his brother, February, relieved. He was a short, fat, jolly, little fellow, clad in furs; so he too passed slowly out, bearing with him pop corn, home made candy, and all such things. He was followed by March, a blustering young fellow, and to everyone's surprise the favorite of his gentle sister May. April and May were twin sisters, but they were not at all alike. March left, slowly followed by April, all smiles and tears, who lingered a while, and then, were quickly, followed by May, making the air sweet with apple blossoms and early roses and violets. When May appeared the trees would all unfold their green banners. As May passed out, June came, bringing with her a large basket of roses, lilies, and long, beautiful days. June in her turn, was followed by July, a hot-tempered young fellow, in a blue and white boating suit. He passed along and escorted in his sister August, who brought a few early fruits, followed by September and October, who brought beautiful fruit and cool frosty weather. Then came November with her gay little servant Thanksgiving Day, then December with St. Thomas' Day and also Christmas. During the time that the months had before the next came in, they all joined hands and danced round and round their old white headed father of 1891.

Falling Fast.

DEAR SIRS—My mother was falling very fast after three months' suffering from dropsy, being swollen from head to foot, but after she had used one bottle of your Burdock Blood Bitters it was removed, and she felt quite well. We think there is no better medicine, and are true friends to B. B. B.

THE PRINCE OF WAILS.

London Tid Bits has just awarded a two guinea prize for "The Best Definition of a Baby." The prize was won by Miss Nellie Braidwood, of Girvan, England, who sent this answer:—A tiny feather from the wing of love, dropped into the sacred lap of motherhood.

The following is a selection from some of the best definitions submitted:—

The bachelor's horror, the mother's treasure and the despotic tyrant of the most republican household.

A human flower untouched by the finger of care.

The latest addition of humanity, of which every couple think they possess the finest copy.

A native of all countries who speaks the language of none.

An invention for keeping people awake at night.

A mite of a thing that requires a mighty lot of attention.

A diminutive specimen of perverse humanity that could scarcely be endured if he belonged to some one else; but being our own, is a never failing treasury of delight.

The unconscious mediator between father and mother, and the focus of their hearts.

A daylight charmer and a midnight alarmer.

About twenty-two inches of coo and wriggle, writhe and scream filled with suction and testing apparatus for milk, and automatic alarm to regulate supply.

A quaint little craft called Innocence, laden with simplicity and love.

The Story Teller.

—OR— TRUE TO THE LAST.

CHAPTER XXVI. (Continued).

She did not weep as she thought of this, but there grew over her white face a shadow of disdainful pity for his pride; and Sir Hilton saw it, and wondered. It seemed to him that they had changed places, and she was the accuser now, while she stood humbled and abashed, before her; she was no longer the wilful, petted child, or the passionate girl, whose humble, caressing tenderness he had first encouraged, then rejected. No, she was a woman now, chastened and subdued—by a sense of guilt, he thought—and prouder and colder in her repentance than he would have deemed it possible that the fiery and loving Olive Varcoe could ever be. Then it was so strange that she should be cold to him—to him who had insulted and forsaken her, and deemed her guilty; yes, strange, indeed, that the love that from boyhood, in all its wild devotion, had ever been his, could at last grow weary, and fade away. Was this pale icicle really Olive—the Olive who had loved him so dangerously and deeply, and whom he had dreamed of so often as weeping at his feet? He had thought of her as loving Charles Vigo, but his first glimpse of her face made him forget that; now it came back to him bitterly, and he turned in anger to the door.

"Farewell, Miss Varcoe," said he. "You desire me to leave you, and I go. I have no right to ask you why you are here, or under what circumstances. I presume your conscience exonerates you from wishing to bring trouble on this house, and that is enough. You know best whether you ought to seek an asylum here, Mrs Langley being a widow and blind."

"Blind!" repeated Olive, mournfully; "ah, blind, blind, blind! Go, Sir Hilton; go, before I say something that will kill you as you stand."

In the school of adversity Olive had learned to discipline her soul; so this was the only bitterness to which she gave vent, in return for his cruel words. If he wondered at her speech, he had no time to answer it, for the door opened, and Herbert Langley entered, followed by Chadwick and Damerel.

"Miss Vansittart," said Herbert Langley, approaching her with deep respect, "I trust you will forgive me for intruding on you, but I am anxious to introduce to you a friend of mine, who is bent on believing that you are not yourself. Allow me to make known to you Mr. Vivian Damerel."

Olive half rose and bowed, with her large eyes fixed on the cold face of the man who had always looked on her with suspicion. He was as pale as death, and his firm set lips looked cruel in their contempt and scorn. He had fancied she would not dare to meet his glances, but she did so firmly, sadly, calmly, and his eyes were the first that fell. Neither of them spoke a word. Not noticing this, Herbert Langley eagerly introduced Chadwick, who rattled on in his usual way.

"You are scarcely strong enough to bear our presence, Miss Vansittart," said Herbert Langley, apologetically; "but my anxiety to introduce Mr. Damerel to you must be my excuse. Trewavas, how came you here?"

"I came to see Miss Langley," replied Sir Hilton, in some embarrassment.

"And here she is!" exclaimed Chadwick.

Florian seemed much agitated; she was flushed, and trembling. She held a letter in her hand.

"Herbert," she said, eagerly, as she bowed to the three gentlemen who greeted her, "I want to speak to you."

"One thing at a time, Fin, if you please," said her brother, putting her aside. "Let me finish this affair with Mr. Damerel first. Damerel," he continued, "here is my hand—take it, if you can say you are sorry for the mistake that has caused so much trouble."

Vivian Damerel looked at Florian—he wanted to make her understand that what he did, he did for her sake; but she kept her head turned away as she bent over Olive anxiously.

"If I have given you or Miss Langley trouble, I am sorry for it," said Vivian evasively.

"But now you have seen Miss Vansittart," persisted Herbert, "you are of course willing to acknowledge that your O'er rough and stormy mountain ridge,

Orphaned, alone, and cold,
The stranger closely grasps our hands,
And leads us home to wife.

But high above the passing years
We know the Lord is King,
And every day of all the months
Some gift from him shall bring;
We trust him and are not afraid
The while his love we sing.

He never has forgotten us!
The story of the years
Is full of his great goodness
Through all our hope and fears;
And he will bless us every day,
And wipe away our tears.

After the darkness comes the dawn,
And though the past was sad,
The sunshine will break forth again,
And all the world be glad;
Where death has been, the flowers shall bloom,
In summer beauty clad.

And as we lift our eyes to thee,
O thou who changest not;
Then keepest us within thy heart—
We shall not be forgot;
And light from thee shall bless the way,
Whate'er our earthly lot.

We thank thee for thy tenderness;
We praise thee for thy grace;
We fear not anything that comes
Before we see thy face.
Lead thou us yet another year
Nearer thy fair home place.

OLIVE VARCOE

—OR— TRUE TO THE LAST.

CHAPTER XXVI. (Continued).

She did not weep as she thought of this, but there grew over her white face a shadow of disdainful pity for his pride; and Sir Hilton saw it, and wondered. It seemed to him that they had changed places, and she was the accuser now, while she stood humbled and abashed, before her; she was no longer the wilful, petted child, or the passionate girl, whose humble, caressing tenderness he had first encouraged, then rejected. No, she was a woman now, chastened and subdued—by a sense of guilt, he thought—and prouder and colder in her repentance than he would have deemed it possible that the fiery and loving Olive Varcoe could ever be. Then it was so strange that she should be cold to him—to him who had insulted and forsaken her, and deemed her guilty; yes, strange, indeed, that the love that from boyhood, in all its wild devotion, had ever been his, could at last grow weary, and fade away. Was this pale icicle really Olive—the Olive who had loved him so dangerously and deeply, and whom he had dreamed of so often as weeping at his feet? He had thought of her as loving Charles Vigo, but his first glimpse of her face made him forget that; now it came back to him bitterly, and he turned in anger to the door.

"Farewell, Miss Varcoe," said he. "You desire me to leave you, and I go. I have no right to ask you why you are here, or under what circumstances. I presume your conscience exonerates you from wishing to bring trouble on this house, and that is enough. You know best whether you ought to seek an asylum here, Mrs Langley being a widow and blind."

"Blind!" repeated Olive, mournfully; "ah, blind, blind, blind! Go, Sir Hilton; go, before I say something that will kill you as you stand."

In the school of adversity Olive had learned to discipline her soul; so this was the only bitterness to which she gave vent, in return for his cruel words. If he wondered at her speech, he had no time to answer it, for the door opened, and Herbert Langley entered, followed by Chadwick and Damerel.

Olive half rose and bowed, with her large eyes fixed on the cold face of the man who had always looked on her with suspicion. He was as pale as death, and his firm set lips looked cruel in their contempt and scorn. He had fancied she would not dare to meet his glances, but she did so firmly, sadly, calmly, and his eyes were the first that fell. Neither of them spoke a word. Not noticing this, Herbert Langley eagerly introduced Chadwick, who rattled on in his usual way.

"You are scarcely strong enough to bear our presence, Miss Vansittart," said Herbert Langley, apologetically; "but my anxiety to introduce Mr. Damerel to you must be my excuse. Trewavas, how came you here?"

"I came to see Miss Langley," replied Sir Hilton, in some embarrassment.

Florian seemed much agitated; she was flushed, and trembling. She held a letter in her hand.

"Herbert," she said, eagerly, as she bowed to the three gentlemen who greeted her, "I want to speak to you."

Vivian Damerel looked at Florian—he wanted to make her understand that what he did, he did for her sake; but she kept her head turned away as she bent over Olive anxiously.

"If I have given you or Miss Langley trouble, I am sorry for it," said Vivian evasively.

"But now you have seen Miss Vansittart," persisted Herbert, "you are of course willing to acknowledge that your

"What!" he cried. "Do you dare still to question my honor and truth? Florian—Miss Vansittart—this man insults you both."

Restraining his passion, Damerel answered to his accusation:

"I see no necessity for a quarrel, Langley. If your sister will say this young lady is Miss Vansittart, I will say the same, and acknowledge that I was deluded by a likeness, not so great in Hieronaxo as it was some months ago."

"Speak—Fin!" cried her brother vehemently.

Florian saw that Vivian Damerel was resolved to lay her under a personal obligation to himself. To gain her gratitude he would tell this falsehood, but not else; he would tell it as a favor to her, or he would speak the truth. Again pressing one hand on Olive's shoulder to implore her silence, she stretched the other towards Damerel.

"Read this letter, Mr. Damerel, without making one comment on it," she said. "When you have finished it, I will answer you."

Her earnest manner, her grave look, commanded attention, and even Herbert let her have her own way in silence. Still, with that sad pitiful shadow on her face, she turned to Sir Hilton Trewavas.

"Sir Hilton, three days ago I promised you news of your brother," she said. "I give it now. I heard to day, by a sure hand, that he is still at Trewavas, ill—perhaps dying—"

Olive would have started up, but Florian's firm hand still held her, and that nervous grasp still extracted her to have patience, and be silent.

"And I think you will find a telegram at your hotel, imploring your instant return," concluded Florian.

"Thank Heaven, poor John is at least at home!" said Sir Hilton, with pale lips; "what a comfort that he is found."

No one echoed this. Vivian Damerel, with the face of one who has seen a great horror, had that instant restored the letter to Florian, and he now stood leaning against the chimney-piece, pale, agitated, and silent.

"Here is Mrs. Langley coming up stairs," said Dick Chadwick in surprise. Feeling himself de trop, he had stood in the doorway, whence he commanded a view of the staircase.

"My mother!" exclaimed Herbert in dismay. Then he hurried towards Olive, saying excitedly, "Miss Vansittart, do not speak while she is here, I entreat you. She is not aware you are arrived, and she is very nervous. If you are silent she will know nothing till we tell her to-morrow."

Olive turned and looked reproachfully at Florian, but there was no time for words, as the blind lady at this moment entered the room, leaning on the arm of a servant, who quitted her, as her son stretched out his hand and took hers.

"Who is here?" asked Mrs. Langley anxiously.

"I," returned Sir Hilton, quickly. He dirined that Olive was here against the blind lady's will, and this further deceit pained and galled him; so, although he felt that he ought to go at once to his hotel, his anxiety made him linger.

"Sir Hilton," said Mrs Langley, taking his hand in hers, which trembled, "I feel for you with my whole heart. Do you go on this sad journey alone?" she asked, and that sorrowful shadow of pity stood more visibly on her blind face than in Florian's tearful eyes.

"I go alone," he replied, a little wonderingly.

"Not alone, Trewavas," said Damerel, in a husky voice. "I will go with you."

"Mr. Damerel," said the blind lady, "you are kind in that offer; yes, go with him. And Mr. Chadwick, you will accompany us? We return to England instantly."

"Damerel heard this request, and yet he did not repent of his proposal to accompany Sir Hilton. The sup pressed excitement in his face and manner checked the exuberant flow of thanks with which Chadwick accepted Mrs. Langley's proposition. Herbert, however, uninfluenced by the silent fever in the hearts around him, exclaimed, in a vexed tone, that he saw no reason for such a sudden move; but his mother interrupted his speech.

"Who is here?" she said, uneasily. "Florian, what lady is here besides yourself?"

"Oh, mother, what nonsense!" cried Herbert. But his mother turned on him sagrily.

"Children," she exclaimed, "do you take advantage of my blindness to deceive me?"

Her sorrowful voice pierced Sir Hilton's ear like a knell. What would anyone else have thought of Olive's presence, it was she felt so palpably? Vivian Damerel, still pale, still excited, looked at Florian, and her eyes plainly answered back, Speak!

"Mrs. Langley," he said, in a clear, low voice, "it is Miss Vansittart who is here."

As he uttered this, Olive flung back Florian's restraining hand and rose hurriedly.

"There is no Miss Vansittart here," she said, in a sad, unfaltering tone. "Mrs. Langley, I am Olive Varcoe."

Herbert Langley heard this; and, in amazement, and pale as death, he rushed towards his sister, and wrenched her from Olive's side.

"Are you mad, Florian?" he cried, in fury. "What villainy is this? And you, girl, how have you dared chest my mother and sister, and contaminate their roof with your terrible presence?"

As he spoke thus to Olive, he saw his blind mother seek her way uncertainly towards that pale, shrinking figure, and clasp her in her arms, while her face streamed with tears.

"Mother!" he exclaimed in horror.

"Read this," said Florian, in a whisper, putting the letter in his hand. "It is from Mrs. Gossing. She is play-

OLIVE VARCOE

—OR—

TRUE TO THE LAST.

She did not weep as she thought of this, but there grew over her white face a shadow of disdainful pity for his pride; and Sir Hilton saw it, and wondered. It seemed to him that they had changed places, and she was the wooer now, while she stood humbled and abashed, before her; she was no longer the willful, petted child, or the passionate girl, whose humble, caressing tenderness he had first encouraged, then rejected. No, she was a woman now, chastened and subdued—by a sense of guilt, he thought—and prouder and colder in her repentance than he would have deemed it possible that the fiery and loving Olive Varcoe could ever be. Then it was so strange that she should be cold to him—to him who had insulted and forsaken her, and deemed her guilty; yes, strange, indeed, that the love that from boyhood, in all its wild devotion, had ever been his, could at last grow weary, and fade away. Was this pale icicle really Olive—the Olive who had loved him so dangerously and deeply, and whom he had dreamed of so often as weeping at his feet? He had thought of her as loving Charlie Vigo, but his first glimpse of her face made him forget that; now it came back to him bitterly, and he turned in anger to the door.

"Farewell, Miss Varcoe," said he. "You desire me to leave you, and I go. I have no right to ask you why you are here, or under what circumstances. I presume your conscience exonerates you from wishing to bring trouble on this house, and that is enough. You know best whether you ought to seek an asylum here, Mrs Langley being a widow and blind."

"Blind!" repeated Olive, mournfully; "ah, blind, blind, blind! Go, Sir Hilton; go, before I say something that will kill you as you stand."

In the school of adversity Olive had learned to discipline her soul; so this was the only bitterness to which she gave vent, in return for his cruel words. If he wondered at her speech, he had no time to answer it, for the door opened, and Herbert Langley entered, followed by Chadwick and Damerel.

"Miss Vansittart," said Herbert Langley, approaching her with deep respect, "I trust you will forgive me for intruding on you, but I am anxious to introduce to you a friend of mine, who is bent on believing that you are not yourself. Allow me to make known to you Mr. Vivian Damerel."

Olive half rose and bowed, with her large eyes fixed on the cold face of the man who had always looked on her with suspicion. He was as pale as death, and his firm set lips looked cruel in their contempt and scorn. He had fancied she would not dare to meet his glances, but she did so firmly, sadly, calmly; and his eyes were the first that fell. Neither of them spoke a word. Not noticing this, Herbert Langley eagerly introduced Chadwick, who rattled on in his usual way.

"You are scarcely strong enough to bear our presence, Miss Vansittart," said Herbert Langley, apologetically; "but my anxiety to introduce Mr. Damerel to you must be my excuse. Trowavas, how came you here?"

"I came to see Miss Langley," replied Sir Hilton, in some embarrassment.

"And here she is!" exclaimed Chadwick.

Florian seemed much agitated; she was flushed, and trembling. She held a letter in her hand.

"Herbert," she said, eagerly, as she bowed to the three gentlemen who greet of her, "I want to speak to you."

"One thing at a time, Flo, if you please," said her brother, putting her aside. "Let me finish this affair with Mr. Damerel first. Damerel," he continued, "here to my hand—take it, if you can say you are sorry for the mistake that has caused so much trouble."

Vivian Damerel looked at Florian—he wanted to make her understand that what he did, he did for her sake; but she kept her head turned away as she bent over Olive anxiously.

"If I have given you or Miss Langley trouble, I am sorry for it," said Vivian evasively.

"But now you have seen Miss Vansittart," persisted Herbert, "you are of course willing to acknowledge that your Olive would have started up, but Florian's firm hand still held her, and that nervous grasp still entreated her to have patience, and be silent.

"And I think you will find a telegram at your hotel, imploring your instant return," concluded Florian.

"Thank Heaven, poor John is at least at home!" said Sir Hilton, with pale lips; "what a comfort that he is found."

No one echoed this. Vivian Damerel, with the face of one who has seen a great horror, had that instant restored the letter to Florian, and he now stood leaning against the chimney-piece, pale, agitated, and silent.

"Here is Mrs. Langley coming up stairs," said Dick Chadwick in surprise. Feeling himself de trop, he had stood in the doorway, whence he commanded a view of the staircase.

"My mother!" exclaimed Herbert in dismay. Then he hurried towards Olive, saying excitedly, "Miss Vansittart, do not speak while she is here, I entreat you. She is not aware you are arrived, and she is very nervous. If you are silent she will know nothing till we tell her to-morrow."

Olive turned and looked reproachfully at Florian, but there was no time for words, as the blind lady at this moment entered the room, leaning on the arm of a servant, who quitted her, at her son stretched out his hand and took hers.

"Who is here?" asked Mrs. Langley anxiously.

"I," returned Sir Hilton, quickly. He divined that Olive was here against the blind lady's will, and this further deceit pained and galled him; so, although he felt that he ought to go at once to his hotel, his anxiety made him linger.

"Sir Hilton," said Mrs Langley, taking his hand in hers, which trembled, "I feel for you with my whole heart. Do you go on this sad journey alone?" she asked, and that sorrowful shadow of pity stood more visibly on her blind face than in Florian's tearful eyes.

"I go alone," he replied, a little wonderingly.

"Not alone, Trowavas," said Damerel, in a husky voice. "I will go with you."

"Mr. Damerel," said the blind lady, "you are kind in that offer; yes, go with him. And Mr. Chadwick, you will accompany us? We return to England instantly."

"Damerel heard this request, and yet he did not repent of his proposal to accompany Sir Hilton. The suppressed excitement in his face and manner checked the exuberant flow of thanks with which Chadwick accepted Mrs. Langley's proposition. Herbert, however, uninfluenced by the silent fever in the hearts around him, exclaimed, in a vexed tone, that he saw no reason for such a sudden move; but his mother interrupted his speech.

"Who is here?" she said, uneasily. "Florian, what lady is here besides yourself?"

"Oh, mother, what nonsense!" cried Herbert. But his mother turned on him angrily.

"Children," she exclaimed, "do you take advantage of my blindness to deceive me?"

Her sorrowful voice pierced Sir Hilton's ear like a knell. What would anyone, who knew Olive's presence, it was she felt so palpably? Vivian Damerel, still pale, still excited, looked at Florian, and her eyes plainly answered back, Speak!

"Mrs. Langley," he said, in a clear, low voice, "it is Miss Vansittart who is here."

As he uttered this, Olive flung back Florian's restraining hand and rose hurriedly.

"There is no Miss Vansittart here," she said, in a sad, unfaltering tone. "Mrs. Langley, I am Olive Varcoe."

Herbert Langley heard this; and, in amazement, and pale as death, he rushed towards his sister, and wrenched her from Olive's side.

"Are you mad, Florian?" he cried, in fury. "What villainy is this? And you, girl, how have you dared shame my mother and sister, and contaminate their roof with your terrible presence?"

As he spoke thus to Olive, he saw his blind mother seek her way gropingly towards that pale, shrinking figure, and clasp her in her arms, while her face streamed with tears.

"Mother!" he exclaimed in horror.

"Read this," said Florian, in a whisper, putting the letter in his hand. "It is from Mrs. Gunning. "She is going. Ah, Miss Langley, get him to forgive me if you can. I might have known such a heart as his could not err," and he paused, and be silent.

"I know it," she replied. "Go, pray go; Olive is too weak for this agitation."

She was so pale, so agitated herself, that Vivian Damerel hastened to obey her. He made his adieu quickly to all, bowing to Olive as to a queen; then he took Sir Hilton's arm, and led him away. And Sir Hilton, looking back, saw resting on every face that strange shadow of pity, the memory of which followed him through the thronged streets of Paris, and haunted his fevered thoughts, as he hurried on day and night in blindness to that awakening horror that awaited him beneath the grey roof of Trowavas.

BOWLING GREEN.

(Too late for last week.)

CHANGE OF TEACHERS.—Miss Peters' held her Christmas examinations last Monday, and it was largely attended. Next term Miss Peters teaches at Laurel and Miss Riley of Orangeville takes her place here.

LAID UP.—Israel Hilker is laid up with an attack of inflammation of the bowles and his illness is looked on as serious. We earnestly hope to see him around again.

A SUCCESS.—Messrs. Burns and Hill had a great sale of farm stock and implements on Monday last. The day was fine and a large crowd came from both ways. After the sale a crowd of young folks clubbed together and soon a merry dance was well under way, about twenty-five couples taking part in it. The small, delicate feet of the ladies, and the great big ugly feet of the gents chased each other over the floor until 3 o'clock in the morning. R. Smith, J. Menary, and I. Whaley provided the music and W. Jelly, W. Bates and J. Banks acted as masters of ceremonies.

GLEE CLUB ORGANIZED.—A glee club has been organized here at last and we must thank THE SUN for kindly helping us to get up an organization of some kind. A meeting was held on Saturday evening and the proceedings went harmoniously on. The club will be a good place to pass the long winter nights and the benefit to the young people will repay any lost time. The following officers were elected: W. B. Jelly, sr., president; A. Rounding, vice president; W. Wansbrough, secretary; R. Edgar, assistant secretary; T. Garbutt, treasurer. Misses Bell Hughston, Bessie Driver, Ina Whaley, Messrs. W. Jelly, J. Lamb and J. Menary, program committee. Rules and regulations were approved by the club, and everything is first class shape. We will send you an invitation, Mr. Editor, to be present at one of our meetings.

On Friday night last the residence of Judge Scott on the "Crescent" was entered by thieves. The family were absent at the time and the house was therefore in sole possession of the intruders. A gun, the bair's dress suit, the collection of photos, besides other articles, are missing.—Brampton Banner.

The late John Finlay, who failed in business at Port Stanley about the year 1878, and left the country, removed to Colorado Spring, Col., where he died some two or three years after, not having accomplished his fixed purpose of paying all his liabilities. He left to his widow the carrying out of his desires, which she has at last been able to do, having completed the payment of all claims against her late husband. The debts in all amounted to between $4,000 and $5,000.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

"What! Wish us a happy New Year in prison walls? The law has pronounced us felons, and separated us from our families and our fellow men. Have you come here to mock us, and jeer at our misfortunes?"

"Not so, brothers. We have all sinned and gone astray, and broken the divine law."

An angel came to St. Paul in prison. The pious monk of old voluntarily immured himself in a cell that he might become by prayer and fasting more fit for his blessed Master's service. Hope your physical life is restricted, that your soul may climb the steeps of moral progress. Make of your prison walls brights to scale, from whose summit you may reach Heaven! The first rung in your ladder—a happy New Year.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR, SISTER!

"Who calls me sister? I have no sister. No woman dare take me by the hand. Yet I had a sister once. She passes me in the street and knows me not. She tells her friends that I am dead. What has one like me to do with happy New Years?"

"Sister, step by step, leads bad to good. Lose your dark yesterdays in beautiful to morrow's. The garb of the penitent is a stately one. The best women have worn it—if not outwardly, in their closet. This angle of yourblood, this stepping stone from whence you may behold the dawn, is where you shall have power to choose the road you will take. Make it in truth a New Year of the soul."

A HAPPY NEW YEAR, MOURNERS!

"Oh, cruel mockery, to wish a happy New Year to one who sits by the grave of lost beloveds, who listens and waits for the step that will never come, whose heart is buried in the dust of renunciation. Wish rather that the New Year may never dawn for me, since the lips I loved are sealed to all eternity.

"And are there no beloveds left, selfish mourner? It is not given to all to have loved and lost. The priceless dower of memory which such love bequeaths should be blessedness enough for any human soul. Give of your ineffable riches to those who have lost and never loved. Keep in touch with lives that have not had this sweet selfish sorrow to nurse and comfort them. It is your own shadow, poor mourner, that stands between you and the New Year."

A happy New Year, brothers and sisters! We do not need to be in church, or on our knees when the New Year comes, though that is one of the dear old customs, but suppose we stop just where we are, and say it to everybody within reach, giving them a send-off in our hearts that shall project into their future like the mind cure with healing power. And if I have an enemy in the world, or there is one whom I have harmed, I hope he will wish me as hearty a Happy New Year as I do him or her. And my friends, who read these words, I shall feel your wish, and it will thrill me with a new hope and prove better than charms or incantations or lucky horseshoes, to carry me safely through the mystic portal from the three hold of which I stretch out loving hands, wishing you all a Happy New Year.

"The year that for us waits
Beyond to-morrow's mystic gates."

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—The combined ill-effects of over-crowding, sedentary occupations and monotony of life are only too well known to those who have to pass the best part of their lives labouring in factories and crowded work rooms. No compulsory confinement weakens the general health and induces chronic constipation, indigestion, and various forms of skin disease. Holloway's remedies are of priceless value to persons of this class, for they can be used without entailing loss of work, being purely vegetable in their composition, and consequently act without harshness on the most delicate system. The experience of more than fifty years proves that no remedy surpass Holloway's remedies for curing bad legs, bad breasts, piles, and wounds of all kinds.

At Brampton yesterday a 4-year old child of Mr. William Barrows, who had been left alone in the house, was seen running from the premises this afternoon enveloped in flames. A gentleman passing succeeded in smothering the flames with his overcoat, but the babe will die. It is supposed the little chap had been playing with fire.

Familiar Family Friend:

The family store of medicine should contain a bottle of Hagyard's Yellow Oil. Mrs. Hannah Hutchins, of Rossway, N. S., says: "We have used Hagyard's Yellow Oil in our family for six years, for coughs, colds, burns, sore throat, croup, etc., and find it no good we cannot do without it."

THE PRINCE OF WAILS.

London Tid Bits has just awarded a two guinea prize for "The Best Definition of a Baby." The prize was won by Miss Nellie Braidwood, of Girton, England, who sent this answer:—A tiny feather from the wing of love, dropped into the sacred lap of motherhood.

The following is a selection from some of the best definitions submitted:—

The bachelor's horror, the mother's treasure and the despotic tyrant of the most republican household.

A human flower untouched by the finger of care.

The latest addition of humanity, of which every couple think they possess the finest copy.

A native of all countries who speaks the language of suns.

An invention for keeping people awake at night.

A mite of a thing that requires a mighty lot of attention.

A diminutive specimen of perverse humanity that could scarcely be endured if he belonged to some one else; but being our own, is a never failing treasury of delight.

The unconscious mediator between father and mother, and the focus of their hearts.

A daylight charmer and a midnight alarmer.

About twenty-two inches of coo and wriggle, writhe and scream filled with suction and testing apparatus for milk, and automatic alarm to regulate supply.

A quaint little craft called Innocence, laden with simplicity and love.

A POPULAR BOARD.

THE members of last year's board of public school trustees seem to be several hundred per cent more popular than certain local papers would try to make the public believe; and THE SUN's good opinion of the trustees has been favored by the electors of this town. To parade the papers can unquestioned with facts would be bad fit before that our trustees were a crowd of scrubbs, who were unable to look after their own business or the affairs of the school. But commission night ended the question, when three out of the four retiring trustees were returned by acclamation and the other one could have been re-elected without opposition if he had so desired. To dispel all doubts as to the efficiency of the trustees the electors nominated only Messrs. Leighton and Purdue in the North and South wards respectively. Mr. J. R. Dodds and Crown Attorney Myers were proposed for the West, but the latter gentleman retired and Mr. Dodds was accordingly returned to his old place.

The people have confidence in the trustees and they will continue to do business at the old stand just the same as if certain papers were never heard tell of.

If our educational representatives do not transact business as we think it should be transacted they may expect their actions to be criticised, but when everything is done above board in a fair and square manner the trustees will receive, as far as THE SUN is concerned, the credit they deserve.

GREEN GETS THERE!

He is Elected Deputy-Reeve of Orangeville for 1892.

BY A MAJORITY OF 68.

A Remarkably Large Vote Polled in all the Wards—Gillespie Takes his Defeat Good-Humoredly.

The principal municipal fight in Orangeville on the recent elections was between Messrs. Marshall Green and Harry Gillespie for the deputy-reeveship of this town. Both of these gentlemen represented the West ward at the council for the past two years, and each of them was anxious to take a step higher. Mr. Green's friends turned out and worked like sailors for their candidate, while Mr. Gillespie's friends allowed him to do all the hustling. The result of the vote surprised many, as this was expected to be one of the closest on record. Mr. Green had majorities in all the wards and there was a large vote polled. Of course it goes without saying that the successful candidate's friends were jubilant when the result was known, while the defeated aspirant took his reverse good-naturally.

THE SUN did not interfere in this fight and the result, therefore, did not make us pull off our hat and cheer or resort to the handkerchief for consolation. The following is the vote:

| | Green | Gillespie |
|---|---|---|
| North ward | 69 | 58 |
| South ward | 109 | 72 |
| East ward | 87 | 63 |
| West ward | 64 | 62 |

THE PEOPLE'S CHOICE!

Riddell and Mann are Elected in the West Ward

AND MORRISON & WEST IN THE EAST

A Remarkably Close Vote to the Former Brethren.

Contests for the council took place only in two wards—the East and West—on Monday, but they furnished plenty of hustling for the competing operants. The latter ward was the place of the most exciting battle, and every vote counted to the last possible advantage. Three good men were seeking the suffrages of the electors, and when the conditions are up to the standard a close fight is expected. THE SUN supported the candidatures of Mr. Joseph Riddell, and we are pleased to say that he was one of the successful competitors. Between Messrs. McKirdy and Mann we did not choose, but left it to the electors' good judgment to decide. As we said before the contest was very close, a great deal closer than has ever occurred before. The vote polled was:

|---|---|
| Mann | 78 |
| Riddell | 77 |
| McKirdy | 76 |

In counting the ballots the deputy returning officer could only find seventy-six each for Messrs. Riddell and McKirdy, but a recount was ordered and a ballot in Joe's favor turned up and settled the question. In our mind the West ward electors have two pretty good representatives.

EASTERN STAKE.

The East ward people had three candidates in the field, Messrs. Morrison, West and Wilson. The contest was close and exciting, the vote being:

|---|---|
| Morrison | 87 |
| West | 86 |
| Wilson | 68 |

Majority for Morrison over West, 1; Majority for West over Wilson, 18.

ELECTION ECHOES.

MR. JAMES JACKSON, reeve of Toronto township, has been chosen as the Conservative candidate for Peel.

THE petition against Mr. G. H. MacDonell, Conservative M. P. for Algoma, was on Tuesday dismissed, as evidence being offered.

Mr. R. F. West surprised the natives by the great run he made in the East ward. Bob "whooped her up" to beat the band and the electors did the rest. He did not head the poll, but he came mighty near it.

THE electoral purity of the Grit party is beautifully exemplified in the fact that since the present law against corrupt practices was enacted six Liberal candidates have been personally disqualified, the last victim being Mr. German of Welland.

THE Reformers of Peel held a convention at Brampton on Saturday and renominated Mr. J. Featherstone, the unseated member of the Dominion parliament, as their standard-bearer at the coming election. They will not purchase votes as openly as they did during the last campaign.

Public School Trustee J. R. Dodds, who has been re-elected for the West ward by acclamation, can afford to treat the sneers of a local paper with the contempt that they deserve. The action of the West wardens in this little matter is a sufficient answer to chronic fault finders, and the sooner kickers take this lesson seriously to heart the better it will be for themselves and all concerned.

THE electors of the West ward did the right act when they returned Mr. Jas. Riddell as one of their representatives at the council. The vote in this ward was the closest on record, being Mann 78, Riddell 77 and McKitrick 76. The two first-named gentlemen have to be tried, but we imagine they will do their duty at the council board. We are sorry the town has lost the services of Mr. S. H. McKitrick, as he made a first-class representative. None of the candidates canvassed but their friends did the work and brought many voters to the polls.

The lumbermen in the North west are doing as well that a movement is on foot to bring more people from that region to the Dominion. The population of Ireland amounts to about 75,000, of which the capital, Reikjavik, comprises not more than 3,000. For this population, it is needless to say, there is ample room in Western Canada, and as Canada those who look to emigration as the only cure for their ills would naturally wish to come. Already, however, our neighbors have been making efforts to divert the exodus to the Western States, and if the Dominion is to have this accession of strength, or whatever proportion of it may finally decide to make trial of the new world, no time should be lost and no effort should be spared to give Canada the benefit of it.

GREEN GETS THERE!

He is Elected Seventy-Seven of Orangeville for 1892.

BY A MAJORITY OF 68.

A Remarkably Large Vote Polled in all the Wards—Gillespie Takes His Defeat Good-Naturedly.

The principal municipal fight in Orangeville on the second election was between Messrs. Marshall Green and Harry Gillespie for the deputy-reeveship of this town. Both of these young men represented the West ward at the council for the past two years, and each of them was anxious to take a step higher. Mr. Green's friends carried out and worked like nailers for their candidate, while Mr. Gillespie's friends allowed him to do all the hustling. The result of the vote surprised many, as this was expected to be one of the closest on record. Mr. Green had majorities in all the wards and there was a large vote polled. Of course it goes without saying that the successful candidate's friends were jubilant when the result was known, while the defeated aspirant took his reverse good-naturedly.

THE SUN did not interfere in this fight and the result, therefore, did not make us pull off our hat and cheer or resort to the handkerchief for reconciliation. The following is the vote:

| | Green | Gillespie |
|---|---|---|
| North ward | 65 | 56 |
| South ward | 100 | 72 |
| East ward | 97 | 68 |
| West ward | 64 | 65 |
| | 326 | 261 |

Majority for Green.....68

BOWLING GREEN.

A SOCCUSS.—The debating society or give club which started here is bound to be a success. Two meetings have already been held and they have been very entertaining.

A SIGHT OF AMUSEMENT.—On New Year's night a lot of the young folks assembled at Mr. John Connor's residence and passed the time in dancing and all sorts of games. An enjoyable evening was spent by all.

SLAUGHTERING THE INNOCENTS.—Christmas and New Year's passed off very quietly here, the time being spent in hunting. Several of the boys went to a neighboring swamp and brought home forty rabbits. It is almost a sin to slaughter the poor little innocent things in this way.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.—This is the season of good wishes, Mr. Editor, and we cannot allow it to pass without wishing you the compliments of the season. May THE SUN ever continue to shed its brilliant beams o'er the country and may they never grow dimmer is your humble correspondent's prayer.

GONE TO THE HOSPITAL.—Mr. Theo. Hinton, jr., who has been laid up for the past three months from the effects of the measles which he contracted last spring, went to the Toronto hospital last week for treatment. It will be remembered that this is the young man who played the fife for the Orangeville lodge last 12th of July. We sincerely trust he will soon come back completely cured.

ELI THE ALDERMAN.—We got our wish at last—Eli Driver, the hustler, that he is, headed the poll. We proposed that Eli would get there with both feet and we are not very much out; in fact what we said came to pass as correct as anything could. We hope he will stick to his seat and when Mr. Johnston is through with the receivship Eli will be invested with the garb of that office. Three cheers for Eli—Hurrah!

WEDDING BELLS.—A very pleasant event took place at the residence of Mr. Robert Ritchie on Wednesday last, being the marriage of his second daughter, Miss Elma, to Mr. James Graham of East Luther. The happy couple drove to Grand Valley where the silken knot was tied by Rev. H. Crosier. Miss Lucy Larter waited upon the bride and Mr. Robert Ritchie, brother of the bride, supported the groom. When the happy couple arrived home a number of friends and a well supplied table awaited them. After full justice was done to the good things dancing and other amusements were indulged in until daylight appeared the following morning. The bride received many handsome and expensive presents.

AMARANTH.

DIED SUDDENLY.—Mrs. Jane Hamilton of Brantford, who has been visiting at Post McLaughlin's residence, died rather suddenly on Monday last. The remains were taken to Brantford for burial on Tuesday.

Ex Reeve Wansbrough's report of commission work did not appear in the minutes of the council. It will be found below:

Edward Trimble, fixing culvert 5th line, lot No. 7, $1.50; R. J Walker, job on 10 side line, con. 6, $35.00; John Pryer, culvert on 5th line, $4.00; Matthew Bennington, cutting out 6th line, lot 15 and levelling, $9.00; James Buchanan, hauling gravel and fixing culvert, $1.50; Clarkson Grieg, new culvert, lot 8, 6th line, $2.75; R. J. Wallace, digging ditch on 12 side line, con. 4, $4.00; Benjamin Field, fixing road, 13 side line, con. 6, $4.00; George Bennet, fixing bridge, 7th line, lot 14, $2.00; Benjamin Field, covering culvert with plank, 7th line, $1.00. George Walker, putting log in culvert, con. 6, [illegible] $1.50; [illegible], putting two logs in bridge, 7th line, lot 19, 50 cents; William Dafoe, putting ten loads of gravel on 10 side line, con. 4, $3.00.

ROBT. WANSBROUGH,
Commissioner.

MARSVILLE.

DEATH OF MISS GEAR.—With deep regret we record the death of Miss Isabella Gear which occurred at Toronto on Wednesday of last week. Deceased was a daughter of the late John Gear of Erin township, and the late Mrs. John Preston of East Garafraxa. The remains of the young lady, who had just reached the age of 18 years were brought here and the funeral took place on New Year's day to Prince's Corners cemetery where the body was laid at rest beside that of her mother who died about four weeks ago. The bereaved ones have our sympathy.

THE PEOPLE'S CHOICE!

Robert and Hugh are Elected in the West Ward

AND MORRISON A WEST IN THE EAST

A Remarkably Close Vote in the Percent Division.

Contests for the council took place only in two wards—the East and West—on Monday, but they furnished plenty of hustling for the competing aspirants. The latter ward was the place of the most exciting battle, and every vote counted to the best possible advantage. Three good men were striving the suffrages of the electors, and when the ballots were up to the standard a close fight is expected. Two SUN supported the candidatures of Mr. Joseph Riddell, and we are pleased to say that he was one of the successful competitors. Between Messrs. McKitrick and Mann we did not choose, but left it to the electors' good judgment to decide. As we said before the voting was very close, a great deal closer than has ever occurred before. The vote polled was:

|---|---|
| Mann | 78 |
| Riddell | 77 |
| McKitrick | 76 |

In counting the ballots the deputy returning officer could only find seventy-six each for Messrs. Riddell and McKitrick, but a recount was ordered and a ballot in Joe's favor turned up and settled the question. In our mind the West ward electors have two pretty good representatives.

EASTERN STARS.

The East ward people had three candidates in the field, Messrs. James Morrison, R. F. West and E. Bell. The fight was interesting while it lasted and the result was very disappointing to the last-named aspirant, who, we are informed, was confident of heading the poll. It was a foregone conclusion that Mr. Morrison would be elected and the struggle, therefore, was between Messrs. West and Bell. Bob's friends rallied around his banner, and an occasional plumper piled up a good majority for him. Bob is a surveyor by profession and his theodolite will be a valuable acquisition to the R. & B. committee. The ballots were counted and told the following tale:

|---|---|
| Morrison | 107 |
| West | 93 |
| Bell | 63 |

CARDWELL.

THE NEW SECTION.—The first meeting of the new school section was held on Wednesday of last week and the following business was transacted: Moved by R. Kidd, seconded by E. Jenkins, that W. E. Hall take the chair. Moved by W. E. Hall, seconded by Jno. McMaster that G. H. Reid act as secretary.

Moved by R. J. Galbraith, seconded by E. Jackson, that Wm. McOlinskey be trustee for a term of three years. Carried.

Moved by Jno McMaster, seconded by W. Jackson, that H. Brocken be trustee for a term of two years.—Carried. The best of good feeling prevailed and the first meeting was a roaring success.

HUGH WON HIS BRIDE.—New Year's time was lively at Herald Angel's, Cardwell, on Wednesday last. At the parsonage a goodly number of clever young fellows were hard at work as only willing hearts can inspire; it was a sawing and splitting wood bee. Indoors were as many prime Mono lasses busy at quilting. But the merry time was destined to be marrier—up drove a wedding party and as is natural round went the whisper, "a wedding! a wedding!" Mr. Hugh Atcheson had captured Miss Hannah, the buxom daughter of Mr. Craig of south Mono. The bride was dressed in garnet satin and assisted by Miss Barnard of Orangeville, who wore a dress of drab cashmere trimmed with satin. Mr. George White of Mono Centre supported the groom. The young fellows worked away very patiently until they felt "surely the nuptial knot is tied firmly by this time." So, with cautious step and pockets full they approached the entry and concealing themselves awaited the exit of the newly wedded pair. As Hugh conducted his bride to the carriage they received a complete ovation from the lads and lasses and they took their seats amidst an abundant shower of rice and good wishes. This excitement over the unexpected pleasure acted as oil to saw, axe and needle. The remainder of the day and good long evening not only saw mountains of wood disappear but hills of cake and oceans of taffy and ended after a satiety of guileless sports.

ELDER.

SUCCESSFUL ENTERTAINMENT.—The entertainment held here on Tuesday evening in aid of St. Matthew's church was a very successful affair. The numbers on the programme were well received especially those by the Henry family. Rev. Mr. Burt was unable to attend owing to illness. Proceeds amounted to about $50.

MONO CENTRE.

ANOTHER TREAT.—The congregation of St. Luke's church, Mono, have decided to hold a New Year's entertainment at the residence of Mr. Jeffery Buchanan on Wednesday, Jan. 13th. A good programme has been prepared for the occasion to which friends from a distance and local talent will take part. Rev. A. C. Watt will also be present. A sumptuous tea will be served from 5 till 7:30. All are welcome.

THEY SHOULD FEEL PROUD.

"Elector's" Opinion on the P. S. Trustees Re-election—What the People Should Do.

To the Editor of THE SUN:

SIR,—The public school board must feel proud of the result of Monday's nominations, as all the old members offering themselves for re-election were returned by acclamation, and had Mr. Kelly consented to stand he, too, would have been returned without opposition. A feeble attempt was made to oppose Mr. Dodds but after considering the matter for a day his opponent saw that the only way to save themselves from a crushing defeat at the poll was to resign, which they unanimously did. The school board has certainly had its revenge on a unscrupulous political priest.

One of your contemporaries has never tired slinging Mr. Kelly and the result is his election in the majority by acclamation. Another has been unremitting in its abuse of Mr. Gillespie. Very few, indeed, be inclined to offer themselves for election to the town council, as no matter how well they fill the office they are sure of abuse from some quarter. It is time for the people of the entire community to rise in their might and stamp out these viper who seem to be never satisfied only when belittling the reputation of the town or some of its citizens.

Yours, etc., ELECTOR.

PERSONAL.

Mr. John Finlay of Toronto was in town last week.

Mr. Geo. Hodgens of Raglan, Ontario county, who has been working his farm in Amaranth during the past season has removed his family from their former place. The people of Amaranth will find Mr. Hodgens an enterprising and reliable citizen. We wish Mr. H. and family every success in their new home.

Winter Sports.

The gay winter season exposes many to attacks of colds, cough, hoarseness, tightness of the chest, asthma, bronchitis, etc., which require a reliable remedy like Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam for their relief and cure. Known as reliable for over thirty years. The best cough cure.

SHELBURNE.

(From Press and Economist.)

SONS OF SCOTLAND.—Mr. Robt. Nimmo of Toronto, is in town for the purpose of organizing a camp of the Sons of Scotland. He is meeting with very good success so far, and it is altogether likely a camp will be organized.

SUDDEN DEATH AT JESSOPVILLE.—Mrs. Eliza White, aged about 78 years, was found dead in her bed at the residence of her son, Mr. Thos. White, postmaster, Jessopville, on Christmas morning. She had apparently been in her usual health up to the time of her retiring to rest, and the discovery on Christmas morning was a shock to the household. The remains were taken to the township of King for interment.

PRESENTATION AT PERK.—A Perk correspondent says: Quite a number of the friends and well wishers of Miss Clingan, teacher of this section, met at her boarding place, Mr. Sherman's, and presented her with a handsome dressing case, a gold ring, and an album, as a small token of gratitude and esteem. Miss Clingan made a suitable reply. During her stay of three years she has made many friends and was always ready to do her duty for a good cause. We understand she will return home to Orangeville where she will attend the high school. After the presentation the crowd enjoyed themselves in speeches, recitations and plays, when they dispersed at an early hour.

Dyspepsia.

This disease may be traced to a variety of causes, such as constipation, liver troubles improper food, etc. There is one cure—Burdock Blood Bitters—which may be thoroughly relied on to effect a permanent cure. It has cured obstinate cases of 25 years standing.

Local Intelligence.

The first cattle fair for this year takes place next Thursday.

Say, ratepayers, what do you think of our new council?

The public and high schools re-opened on Monday morning.

It is said that two private whiskey detectives were operating in Orangeville on election day.

The public school board was to have met on Tuesday evening, but only four members were on hand.

Dufferin county council will commence its first session in the court house on Tuesday, January 26.

The stores will close at 6 o'clock in the evenings, Wednesday and Saturday excepted, until next December.

The man who swore off on New Year's day was kicking himself because there was no free whiskey flowing on election night.

Robert James, the four-year old son of Mr. Wm. Judge (Judge Chapman & Co.), died on Saturday from congestion of the lungs.

Alex. Smith, the school teacher who had one of his legs mangled at Charlesworth's a couple of weeks ago, is rapidly recovering.

An entertainment will take place at the residence of Mr Jeffery Buchanan, lot 15, con. 5, Mono, on Wednesday next. A substantial tea will be served.

Mr. Ed Tone of London, H. C. R. of the O. O. F., will visit Orangeville next Tuesday. The members of Court Dufferin will entertain him during his stay in town.

Rev. M. L. Pearson, in his discourse on Sunday evening last, referred to the death of Mrs. J. R. Parker and other members of the congregation who passed away during the year just closed.

T. S. Reid, better known as "Orange Tillie," has been occupying a cell at the "Ker" since Saturday. His better-half had him arrested for assaulting her, and at the police court on Tuesday he was remanded until the doctors determine whether he is insane or not.

THE SUN is published for $1 a year in advance and if it's not worth that it is not worth a cent. No cheap books or any such premiums will be given, but all interesting news will find a place in its columns. We leave scandal and t'e like to papers who make a specialty of that class of news.

THEY'LL NOT FORGET YOU.—Orangeville was stormed by a company playing Eliot Lynne, on Tuesday. We may expect Uncle Tom's Cabin along soon.—Brampton Banner.

FROM MANITOBA.—On Saturday last the editor of this journal received a letter from Mr. T. G. Poyats of Winnipeg, Man., formerly of this town, renewing his subscription to Dufferin's favorite weekly for the twenty-fifth time. Mr. Poyats concludes his letter by "wishing THE SUN a very prosperous New Year."

THE ANNUAL MEETING.—The annual meeting of the members of the Dufferin Agricultural society will be held in the town hall on Wednesday, January 20, at 1 o'clock. We trust the meeting will be largely attended and that more interest will be taken in this organization than has been during the past few years.

WELL PATRONIZED.—The Methodist anniversary took place in the town hall on New Year's evening and was one of the most successful events of the season. The tea, which was [illegible], passed the most fastidious and the musical portion of the programme was away above the standard. The proceeds amounted to $[illegible].

GOOD ENTERTAINMENT.—The entertainment, under the auspices of the Orange band in the hall last evening was not well attended owing to the unfavorable weather. Those who attended, however, were well repaid for their trouble, and had the pleasure of listening one of America's greatest impersonators, Sam Lord Bailey.

RINK REOPENED.—The Orangeville skating rink reopened for the season on New Year's day. Messrs Bunting Bros. are the managers, and it is needless to say that the rink will be conducted in first class style. The ice is in excellent condition and the skating population are the ones to take advantage of it. We wish the new managers a prosperous season.

[illegible].—Grip offers prizes of $30, $20 and $10 for the best short humorous article, story, poem, narrative or character sketch sent in before March 1, 1892. The prizes will be awarded not one week on literary merit, as upon the number and opinion of the prompt judgments, being delivered. Send in a bale of hay or all of literary work. There is a chance for young writers to try for the prizes. The competition is open to all comers.

Alex. Smith, the school teacher who had one of his legs mangled at Charlesworth station a couple of weeks ago, is rapidly recovering.

An entertainment will take place at the residence of Mr Jeffery Buchanan, lot 15, con. 5, Mono, on Wednesday next. A substantial tea will be served.

Mr. Ed Towe of London, H. C. R. of the C. O. F., will visit Orangeville next Tuesday. The members of Court Gardiner will entertain him during his stay in town.

Rev. M. L. Pearson, in his discourse last Sunday evening last, referred to the death of Mrs. F. R. Parker and other members of the congregation who passed away during the year just closed.

J. B. Reid, better known as "Orange Billy," has been occupying a cell at the "Big" since Saturday. His better-half had him arrested for assaulting her, and at the police court on Tuesday he was remanded until the doctors determine whether he is insane or not.

THE SUN is published for $1 a year in advance and if it's not worth that it is not worth a cent. No cheap books or outside premiums will be given, but interesting news will find a place in our columns. We leave scandal and the to papers who make a specialty of this class of news.

THEY'LL NOT FORGET YOU.—Orangeville was stormed by a company hailing from East Lynne, on Tuesday. We expect Uncle Tom's Cabin along soon.—Brampton Banner.

FROM MANITOBA.—On Saturday last the editor of this journal received a letter from Mr. T. G. Poynts of Winnipeg, Man., formerly of this town, renewing his subscription to Dufferin's favorite weekly for the twenty-fifth time. Mr. Poynts concludes his letter by "wishing THE SUN a very prosperous New Year."

THE ANNUAL MEETING.—The annual meeting of the members of the Dufferin Agricultural society will be held in the town hall on Wednesday, January 20, at 1 o'clock. We trust the meeting will be largely attended and that more interest will be taken in this organization than has been during the past few years.

WELL PATRONIZED.—The Methodist anniversary took place in the town hall on Monday evening and was [illegible] of the season. [illegible] was [illegible] interesting and [illegible] of the programme was [illegible] executed. The proceeds [illegible] The entertainment under the auspices of the Epworth League in the hall last evening was [illegible] and those who attended, however, were well repaid for their trouble, and had the pleasure of hearing one of America's greatest elocutionists, Sara Lord Bailey.

RINK REOPENED.—The Orangeville skating-rink reopened for the season on New Year's day. Messrs Bunting Bros. are the managers, and it is needless to say that the rink will be conducted in first class style. The ice is in excellent condition and the skating population are not slow to take advantage of it. We wish the new managers a prosperous season.

GRIP.—Grip offers prizes of $30, $20 and $10 for the best short humorous article, story, poem, narrative or character sketch sent in before March 1, 1892. The prizes will be awarded not so much on literary merit, as upon the humor and aptness of the conceptions. Professional writers being debarred, there is a fair field for all of a literary turn. Here is a chance for young writers to test their abilities. See announcement in Grip.

FRIENDS OF LONG AGO.—Among the subscribers who called to renew their subscriptions to THE SUN last week were Mrs. Harris, Caledon, Geo. Bennett, Laurel, A. Lennox, Caledon, A. Hardy, Moco Centre, Wm. Reid and Neil Moore of this town. They have been reading THE SUN from the time it was first printed thirty-one years ago. We wish all our friends a Happy New Year and many returns of the same.

THE LAW AND DIPHTHERIA.—An order in council has been passed in regard to diphtheria, the germ of which is as follows:—Whenever diphtheria is present in any municipality in Ontario, the council of every such municipality shall at once appoint one or more sanitary policemen for the purpose of assisting to arrest the spread of the disease, and the council of any municipality of Ontario where the provincial board of health deems the appointment of one or more sanitary policemen necessary, shall also make such appointment.

HIS GRACE LECTURES.—Rev. Father Jeffcott of Pickering celebrated high mass in St. Peter's church here on Sunday last, the service being attended by citizens of all denominations. In the evening the church was crowded to the doors, all coming to hear Archbishop Walsh's lecture, the subject of which was "What Catholics do not believe." The archbishop is a good orator and his discourse was listened to with wrapt attention. A choir from Toronto was present and added greatly to the service. Archbishop Walsh expressed himself as well pleased with his visit to Orangeville.

BRAMPTON'S SECOND DEFEAT.—Orangeville has always been a great town for sports and our organizations take the cake wherever they go. At Brampton last week they defeated the experts of that town by six points, this being the second time this season that the Bramptonians have suffered defeat by our keen-eyed hustlers. The score was:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| J. C. Fox | 6 | Ellison | 6 |
| T. N. Williamson | 8 | Wallace | 6 |
| H. Crozier | 7 | Calbie | 7 |
| W. Stubbs | 6 | Lee | 7 |
| J. Large | 7 | Anderson | 8 |
| J. Dick | 9 | Wilson | 5 |
| J. A. Turnbull | 8 | Barry | 6 |
| | 51 | | 45 |

TEA-MEETING AT LAUREL.—The annual tea meeting and entertainment of the Laurel Presbyterian church will be held to-morrow, and it promises to be a grand affair. The musical part of the program will be filled by the Camilla choir, the Bowling Green Harmonic band and others. Readings and recitations by Mr. and Miss McLachlan of Amaranth station and Miss Pickings of Laurel. Addresses will be delivered by Revs. D. C. Hossack, Orangeville, Leake, Grand Valley, Thornley and Gray, Laurel, and Messrs. Ferguson, Vanstter, Bell, Toronto and others. Rev. Mr. Crozier of Grand Valley will occupy the chair. Tea from 5 to 8. A most enjoyable time may be depended upon.

AN OLD RESIDENT DEAD.—One of the earliest settlers of this town joined the great majority on Friday last in the person of Elizabeth Bird, wife of Mr. Abiathar Wilcox of First street. Deceased was the mother of Mr. George Wilcox, one of the public school trustees for the West ward. She had not been enjoying good health for the past year and, therefore her death was not unexpected. The funeral took place from her husband's residence, First street, on Monday afternoon to the Forest Lawn cemetery, a large number of friends and acquaintances following the remains to the grave. Mr. Wilcox and the bereaved family have our warmest sympathy.

SURROGATE COURT.—Grants of probate and letters of guardianship were made in the surrogate court of the county of Dufferin during the month of December as follows: On the 9th December probate was granted of the last will and testament of Isabella Preston, married woman, East Garafraxa, who died on the 28th November last. Value of personality, $1,500; John Preston of East Garafraxa and Henry Gear, Toronto, executors.....December 26th letters of guardianship of Isabella Gear of East Garafraxa, infant child of John Gear and Isabella Gear, formerly of the township of Erin, both deceased, were issued to Henry Gear, medical student, Toronto, brother of the infant. Value of the personality involving $2,300; W. L. Walsh solicitor for the applicant.

THE ADJOURNED MEETING.—The adjourned public meeting took place in the town hall on Monday evening and quite a large number of ratepayers were present. Mr. W. L. Walsh, the retiring mayor, was the principal speaker of the evening and he gave an excellent statement of the town's financial standing. Mr. Moody was also there and he questioned the speakers about waterworks and several other things. The ex mayor said he intended replying to the criticisms of a local paper, but as the paper in question had not a representative at the meeting he would rather wait until the editor made his appearance. The latter failed to show up and Mr. Walsh was spared the task of laying "two" out. Votes of thanks were unanimously carried after which the meeting dispersed.

THOS. UNWELL.—A number of cases of sickness are reported this week and it is likely a larger number will come under the doctor's notice next week. In our last issue THE SUN's medical reporter prophesied the la grippe was going to sweep this section of the county before many days, and it looks very much as if that grip's advance agent has struck town. There are probably more sick people living on John street than on any other street in Orangeville. Mrs. Morrison is suffering from the effects of cancer and Mr. Geo. Siggins has had a relapse and is not so well as he was last week. Mrs. Coleman and Mrs. Kitchen are also laid up, the latter being in a very serious condition. Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Washington of Wellington street are both confined to their bed with an attack of la grippe. Bertha, the young daughter of Mr. J. Kearns, and Williamson, son of Mr. Wm. Hall, who have been sick for the past few weeks, are recovering. Mrs. W. R. Knox, Mrs. and Miss McCormick, and Mr. G. Richardson are also on the sick list.

JUST why so many people suffer pain when a remedy of known and certain effect like Hagyard's Yellow Oil may be had at every drug store, is not very clear. This peerless pain soothing remedy is a prompt and pleasant cure for sore throat, croup, colds, rheumatism, lame back, etc. Price 25 cents.

RURAL RETURNS!

Simpson Defeats Hamilton for the Reeveship of East Garry.

AND JNO. TURNER DOWNS M'KEE!

E. Hamilton is Deputy-Reeve of Amaranth.

ELI DRIVER HEADS THE POLL!

Sharp and McVanel the Other Lucky Aspirants—Mr. Dudgeon Left at Home.

In the surrounding townships the municipal elections created a great deal of excitement. An interesting fight was on in East Garafraxa for the reeveship and deputy reeveship of that municipality. In the first named contest three gentlemen engaged, Reeve Hamilton, Deputy-reeve Simpson and Mr. Enoch Price. The battle was short, sharp and decisive, and victory perched on the banner of Mr. Simpson. He had twelve more votes than Mr. Hamilton.

The deputy-reeveship fight was a hot one and the genial John Turner was elected over Mr. McKee by about 40 votes. The councillors were elected by acclamation.

AMARANTH.

As there was no vote for the reeveship in this township it was thought that interest in the elections would lag, but such was not the case. Messrs. Elijah Hamilton and Robt. Curry pitted against each other in a race for the deputy reeve's chair and the contest resulted as every one expected it would, in Mr. Hamilton being returned by a majority of 183. Mr. Curry, the people thought, was stepping too high in coming out for one of the higher offices before he served at the council.

The councillorship contest was a great battle and Amaranth's greatest hustler, Mr. Eli Driver, succeeded in heading the poll. The vote stood:

|---|---|
| Driver | 258 |
| Sharp | 256 |
| McVanel | 222 |
| Dudgeon | 188 |

The greatest municipal fight that has taken place in Mono for the past few years terminated at 5 o'clock on Monday. Camilla was the place where the returns were received and a great many interested electors assembled there to hear the returns read. Several successful and unsuccessful candidates were also present. They made speeches and were cheered by the ratepayers. When the returns indicated that Mr. James Snell was elected reeve over Deputy reeve Island the former's supporters and friends cheered themselves hoarse.

A call for speeches was made and the candidates responded. Mr. Snell thanked the electors for the grand manner in which they had returned him as reeve of their township for the year 1892, and although the battle was over, his opponent and himself would still be good friends.

Mr. Island said he felt as if a great load was taken off his shoulders by this defeat. The township affairs, he said were in good condition, no bridges would have to be built for a great number of years, and taxation should be light during the coming years. Although he was defeated he would still be friends with Mr. Snell.

Mr. McCluskey, the man who headed the poll, made a rattling fine speech, and if he does as well at the council he'll soon be reeve. After several more made a few remarks the free and independent electors of the banner township wended their way to their homes.

The new council is composed as follows: James Snell, reeve, William Dynes, 1st deputy reeve, David Sull, 2nd deputy reeve, William McCluskey, William McNabb, councillors.

Mr McCluskey headed the poll, having received 322 votes, and Thomas Greer polled only 42 votes in the whole township.

LADY CLARA VERE DE VERE.

(By request).

M. A. O., Albany.—T. B. kindly sends a copy of the verses said to have been written by Lady Clara Vere de Vere in answer to those addressed to her by Tennyson. We would be glad to accede to T. B.'s request to publish Tennyson's poem to Lady Vere de Vere were it not for the fact that it is to be found in every collection of the poet's works and is therefore accessible to the majority of our readers. T. B. prefaces Lady Clara's reply in the following terms:

It is not generally known outside the select London circles that when Lady Clara Vere de Vere learned that Mr. Tennyson had been made a baron, she hastened to write and send him the following verses:

Baron Alfred T. de T.,
Are what last in sweet accord?
I learn—excuse the girlish glee—
That you've become a noble lord;
So now that time to think you've had
Of what it is makes charming girls,
Perhaps you find they're not so bad—
These daughters of a hundred earls.

Baron Alfred T. de T.,
When last your face I chanced to see,
You had the passion of your kind,
You said some horrid things to me;
And then "we parted," you to sail
For Oshkosh, in the simple steerage,
But now, excuse my girlish glee,
You're reappearing in the peerage!

Baron Alfred T. de T.,
Were you indeed misunderstood
That other day I heard you say—
"The only noble do be good?"
I really thought that you affirmed,
"Tis so the words came back to me,
"Kind hearts are more than coronets,"
My Lord, excuse my girlish glee.

Baron Alfred T. de T.,
There stand twin spectres in your hall,
So as they found you years ago,
Two wholesome hearts were changed to gall;
The two, an humble couple they,
I think I see them on my life,
The while they read of "Barons" T.,
That gardener Adam and his wife.

Baron Alfred T. de T.,
You've treated them, it seems to me,
In quite a shabby sort of style;
You have—excuse my girlish glee;
You praised their garden sass, you did;
You flirted with them, don't deny,
And now you fix a vacant stare
And never speak as they pass by

Trust me, Baron T. de T.,
From you blue heaven above us bent,
This simple granger and his spouse
Smile as you read your title clear:
How'er it be, it seems to me,
'Tis not meet you call my language cruel,
It seems—excuse my girlish glee—
Consistency's a lovely jewel.

Baron Alfred T. de T.,
I know you're proud your name to own,
Your pride is yet no mate for mine,
My blood is finer than your own;
You'll bid me break your heart again
For pastime e'er to town I go,
I'll not do that, my noble lord,
But give you something that I owe.

Baron Alfred T. de T.,
When you were in that angry fit
You turned to me and thundered out,
"Go, teach the orphan girl to knit;"
I am an orphan girl myself,
And that my knitting you may see,
Here is a mitten that I've knit—
Excuse my gushing girlish glee.

CAMILLA.

BOOMING A CHEESE FACTORY.—Messrs. Fleming and Hannah are booming a cheese factory to be established at Camilla, and up to date they have the milk of about one hundred and twenty five promised. They will have to get about two hundred cows before such a factory will materialize. We hope they will get the necessary number and that success will crown their efforts.

REID'S RUNAWAY.—George Reid, the sweet warbler of this locality, was driving from his farm in Amaranth one day last week and had an exciting time. We don't know whether he was singing at the time or not; but when opposite Forsyth's corner the horses began to run for all they were worth. George wasn't in the rig at the time, but his father was and he was thrown out and received a severe shaking-up.

PERSONAL.—Mr. Charles Curtis is spending a few days at home with his parents... Mr. Harry Culp, Etta Patterson, John Scott, Robert Kyle and John Anderson are spending their Xmas holidays at home.... Jos. Robinson and Jos. Meredith have just returned from Toronto after delivering a load of lambs.

ON THE SICK LIST.—Our esteemed friend, Rev. F. Burt of Cardwell, has been laid up with sickness for the past few days, and was unable to attend the annual entertainment of St. Alban's church which was held on the 22nd. We hope soon to be able to chronicle the rev. gentleman's recovery.

[illegible]—Our lodge of the Patrons of Industry is progressing favorably and the members are quite jubilant. They have a unique program for next Wednesday night.

[illegible]TEMENT.—Our school is being improved and impoverished by a partition being put in order to preserve the tympanic membrane of the next headmaster.

ON E. J. [illegible]—Mr. E. J. Cobean has a new (second-hand) delivery sleigh; he also has a new horse and a big boy (?) to run it. The sleigh has been at Orangeville twice. He got it in Shelburne at Sinclair's sale.

THE CLERGY WILL SMILE.—Judging from present appearances it is safe to predict that there are some more couples who will employ the clergymen for a short time. Rake your brains Camillaites, by guessing who they'll be.

NOT IN IT.—We are sorry that Mr. James Parks is not in the field for the council, because he would make a good member. McCluskey and Laird are running a terrific race and we want to see them both elected. Whoop 'er up, boys, there are good times coming!

FAREWELL.—At the closing of school our teachers were the recipients of valuable presents. Mr. Hewitt has taught here three years and Mr. Bremner one. The former received a handsome chair and the latter a gold watch-chain and neck-scarf. Both replied to the addresses in a few words, and there was scarcely a dry eye among the scholars. Mr. Walker takes Mr. Hewitt's place and Miss Lemon takes Mr. Bremner's.

THE JAPANESE GAMBLER.

His Favorite Game in Season, and He is to a Gamble for all He is Worth.

Up in Chinatown, where behind one of a certain alley are lined for a full block with little cubby holes wherein the fascinating "fan" is played, there is plenty of evidence that gaming is one of the Oriental vices. If more proof were required, it could be found in the records of the police courts, where Chinese figure by the score as "players" or "keepers," in the phraseology of the courts, and in the large amounts that fare into the city treasury in the way of fines and forfeited bail from almost-good gamesters caught in the act.

As yet, however, little has been said of the Japanese in this respect. The other day a San Francisco, who is familiar with the language and ways of the little people from over the sea, commented on this fact. "The Japs are the gamiest gamblers on earth," he said. "Not one of them who is addicted to play—and they are nearly all of that kind—but would stake the shirt on his back rather than draw out of a good game. There are several big rooms in the city where 'hanas,' as their favorite game is called, furnish nightly attractions for Japanese students, servants, storekeepers, and so on, by the score. Their play runs high sometimes, for they are naturally a thrifty people, and in times of excitement, such as occur in a stiff game of 'hanas,' they go down into their wallets without hesitation."

The Japanese word "hanas," by which the national game is designated, means, in English, flowers. The game is an old as the race, and is, apparently, a combination of poker, casino, and euchre. The cards are of thin pasteboard, about an inch wide and an inch and a half long. Forty-eight of them make up the deck. The full pack contains twelve combinations of four cards, each series but two representing a month, and each card being in bright colors the picture of some flower which blooms only once a year. The first combination is "chi gatsu," or first month, and the flower is the bud of the sugar plum tree." On two of the cards of this month the flowers are not quite full blown. These are only valuable for pairing. The third card is counted as five points, and the fourth, on which is pictured a flower in full bloom, is worth twenty points.

The "san gatsu," or February series, denoted by the apricot blossom, and the highest card is worth 10 points. The cherry blossom is for March, the wistaria for April, the lily for May, the pampas grass for June, and the tulip for July. September is denoted by the chrysanthemum, and October has for its emblem the leaf of the Japanese tree called "insane gee" the foliage of which turns from green to a bright red in October. The flower of December is the bamboo blossom.

The two months not represented by flowers are August and November. The four cards of the August series denote rain, the first two representing a cloudy day and the others a heavy rain shower. "Gokakusan," or the moon in English, is the sign of the November series, the best in the deck. One of the cards shows the moon in the first quarter, and is of little value, while all the others are high cards, ranging from 5 to 20 points each.

Six players generally make up a "hanas" party. The table is usually round or oval, and is well colored "joints" is of polished wood. The players sit for deal, the handling of the cards going to the holder of the highest picture. Four cards are dealt to each and three to the table, face upward. The composition of the deck is such that at least two hands of the six are valueless, and their holders must sit out. In the game four-handed. Then three more cards are added to each hand and a fifth number to the board.

From this on, the play is much like ordinary euchre. The dealer starts the ball rolling, putting up a blind on the strength of his hand, while the others may "see" or not, as they please. Then the player matches from his hand to the table, at each trick turning up the top card from the remainder of the deck. If he should expose a card of which he has a mate in his hand, he may match it with anything on the board as if from his own hands. When he has exhausted his pairs, he retires, and the player to his right repeats the matching process, and so it goes until the cards are all out. All open bets must be of the amount set by the first player, but the wagers on the side are permissible, to make the game more interesting. The total number of points in the game is 120, and when the cards are all out the tricks are counted, and the layer holding the highest number of points takes the pool, turning over 10 per cent. of the whole amount to the house.

The game is simple and rapidly played, and the "chump" is so heavy that the profits of a Japanese gaming establishment are large. It is an unwritten law among gamblers and the keepers of the dens, that the player who loses his all shall have a good meal at the expense of the house, and that a restaurant is one of the features of every first-class establishment.

In San Francisco beer is the beverage most popular among Japanese while at play, and is consumed in large quantities. The "little men" are heavy players, and the game usually run until all the money in each man's hands.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Have many acquaintances and few friends.

Pay promptly; you will save interest thereby.

Never oppress the poor; even the poor have votes.

Never criticise your neighbor; he may be a fighter in disguise.

Lend your friend money at a fair rate of interest, but indorse for no man.

Associate with the rich; a man is mistaken for the company he keeps.

Look after the dollars and save time, for every dollar contains ten dimes.

Do not pay dear for your whistle, you may never have a chance to make it dearer to some one else.

If you must be charitable, be charitable in public. It sets a good example and you get some return.

Be not overhasty to take offence at the doings of great corporations, for they generally own the Legislature.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

"In the "ethics" [illegible] I restore the color to gray hair; promote a healthy and vigorous growth; prevent the premature decay of the hair; cleanse it from dandruff, and allay the heating and irritation which are the causes of baldness. I have found my hair growing thick and strong, and in a few weeks my bald spot was almost hidden by a new growth of hair. I had many testimonials, but they did not satisfy me. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my hair was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best in the world."—T. Munday, Shiloh Grove, Ky.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for a number of years, and it has always given the satisfaction. It is the finest hair dressing, prevents the hair from worst by growth, promotes its vigorous growth, and keeps the locks white and clean."—Mary A. Jackson, Salem, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for promoting the growth of the hair, and think it unrivalled. For restoring the hair to its original color, and for a dressing, it cannot be surpassed."—Mrs. Geo. La Ferer, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

"Ayer's Hair Vigor is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair and makes it glossy and soft. The Vigor is also a cure for dandruff."—J. W. Bowen, Editor "Enquirer," McArthur, Ohio.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past two years, and found it all it is represented to be. It restores the natural color to gray hair, causes the hair to grow thick and lustrous, and is perfectly [illegible]."—Mrs. M. V. Dey, Cohoes, N. Y.

"My father, at about the age of fifty, lost all the hair from the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor he had a new growth of hair. In three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."—P. D. Quillen, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

How the Pyramids Were Built.

A moneyed man, who was looking yesterday at the process of laying an artificial stone pavement in front of one of his many properties, startled the friends who were standing about him by remarking: "I believe that the Egyptian pyramids were built in just that way." Pressed for an explanation, he said that while he had never been in Egypt he had read the works of all Egyptologists, including Drugsch and Pliny Smith, and had never found in any of them a theory which would satisfactorily account for the manner in which the pyramids were constructed. "Now," he said, "you must remember that the pyramids are made of stone which bears no resemblance to anything found within five hundred miles of their location. It is incredible that the Egyptians of four or five thousand years ago should have possessed the mechanical ingenuity to move these enormous blocks of stone from the granite quarries of Abyssinia or Syria to the pyramids. Is it not much more natural to suppose that the ancient Egyptians possessed the secret of making artificial stone, and that the pyramids were constructed by layer upon layer of Nile River mud, hardened by just such processes as we employ to make artificial stone? It is a much more plausible explanation of their construction than the laborious and unintelligent suppositions that the stones were carried across the desert to form the foundation and base of the pyramids. I firmly believe that the Egyptians of the ante-Christian era understood the manufacture of artificial stone, and that they built the pyramids out of it."—Philadelphia Press.

New Use for Cotton Seed Oil.

If the method of charging cotton seed oil with lead, which is said to have been discovered, is found practicable, the value of that abundant product will be greatly increased. The process as at present defined is of the utmost simplicity. One gallon of pure cotton seed oil is placed in a suitable iron vessel, into which 50 pounds of molten lead is poured in. After a thorough stirring the lead separates into globules, and when the oil has been poured off, after cooling, there is found to be about 17 pounds of the lead, the remainder being absorbed by the oil. On the lead being again melted, and the operation repeated to the fifth pouring—the amount of lead absorbed being less at each succeeding pouring—the total amount of lead absorbed is about ten pounds. The oil thus charged with the lead is then used as a paint, thus applied to the cuttings way to metallic surfaces. It is claimed that the liquid, which adheres closely and becomes very hard, is especially useful in protecting metals from oxidation or corrosion.

"Now is the winter of our discontent made glorious summer" by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This wonderful medicine so invigorates the system and enriches the blood that cold weather becomes positively enjoyable. Arctic explorers would do well to make note of this.

Some days ago we noticed in the Toronto papers particulars of the arrest of a man in that city who had visited several stores, and in the hurry of business was enabled to swindle shopmen out of the price of the goods bought. His game was to present a $10 bill in payment, requesting $5 in part change, and then to object to the form of the remainder, and in the end get the whole of his $10 back. We understand that a well known trickster is trying the same game here, and, therefore, deem it our duty to caution merchants and others against such tricks. In the Toronto case, the man caught was sent to jail, and we hope the same result will follow here if the game is continued.—Guelph Mercury.

Colonel David Wylie, the veteran news-paper man, popularly known as the father of the Canadian press, died at Brockville on Monday, aged 81 years. The large part of his life was spent in Brockville, having come over here to take charge of the Recorder newspaper in 1849, and with which he was connected as proprietor editor until 1883. Up to two years ago Mr. Wylie's life continued to be one of activity, when his health began to fail, and for upwards of a year past he had been confined to the house and latterly to his room. On Saturday last his condition became worse, and he gradually sank into insensibility, breathing his last, as already stated, shortly after 11 o'clock Monday morning. The funeral took place Wednesday afternoon under Masonic auspices.

While exploring some accounts in the Bank of Montreal a few days ago Mayor Geldie of Guelph came across an open account of the cemetery committee of 1856, 25 years ago, and, best of all there was $56.92 standing to its credit. How the money has remained so long without being brought to the notice of the city is not known. The cemetery committee of this year will take steps to appropriate it for the use for which it was intended.

At this season of the year the effects of exposure and cold in the head are most likely to be felt, and danger to life and health will result if not promptly treated. For this purpose there is no remedy equals Nasal Balm. It is prompt in giving relief and never fails to cure. Beware of imitations and substitutes. Sold by all dealers, 50 cents a bottle.

Keep the Works in good order.

HOWICK, Que., January 13, 1884.
W. H. COMSTOCK, Brockville, Ont.
DEAR SIR,—Your "Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills" are the best regulator for the system that humanity can use. Life is at the time piece; frail and delicate are many of its works. A tiny particle of foreign substance adheres to the smallest wheel in the works, and what then? Friction—at first, only a slight difference is perceptible in its time-keeping, but will you care the obstruction grows, the irregularity becomes greater, until at last, what would have been remedied with little trouble, in the beginning, will now require much care in thoroughly cleansing the entire works. So it is in human life—a slight derangement is neglected, it grows and increases, imperceptibly at first, then rapidly; said what would, in the beginning, have been cured with little trouble, becomes fatal. To prevent this, I advise all to purify the system frequently, by the use of Morse's Pills, and so preserve vigor and vitality.
Yours faithfully,
H. P. ATWELL.

Less time than milk drawn from the same or similar cows receiving salt every day, all other conditions of treatment being equal.

Read what Prof. Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says regarding proper ways of salting stock:—"Dairy cattle should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has convinced me that when cows denied salt for a period of seven one week they will yield from 11½ to 14 per cent. less milk, and that of an inferior quality. Stock will eat as or larger, then a or in twenty four hours."

THE only chemically pure Salt ever discovered, analyzed 99 84-100 Pure Salt. So how did time to these you've had
Of what it is makes charming girls,
Perhaps you find they're not so bad—
These daughters of a hundred earls.

Baron Alfred T. de T.,
When had your love I changed to me,
You had the passion of your kind,
You said some horrid things to me;
And then "we parted," you to sail
For Oshkosh, in the simple steerage,
But now, excuse my girlish glee,
You're reappearing in the peerage!

Baron Alfred T. de T.,
Were you indeed misunderstood
That other day I heard you say—
"'Tis only noble to be good?"
I really thought that you affirmed,
"Tis on the words come back to me,
"Kind hearts are more than coronets,"
My Lord, excuse my girlish glee.

Baron Alfred T. de T.,
There stand twin spectres in your hall,
So as they frown upon visitors
Two wholesome hearts were changed to gall;
The two, an humble couple they,
I think I see them on my life,
The while they rest of "liaros" T.
That gardener Adam and his wife.

Baron Alfred T. de T.,
You've treated them, it seems to me,
In quite a shabby sort of style;
You have—excuse my girlish glee;
You praised their garden ass, you did;
You flirted with them, don't deny,
And now you fire vacant stare
And never speak as they pass by

Trust me, Baron T. de T.,
From you bliss heaven above us beat,
This simple granger and his spouse
Smile as you read your title clear;
How'er it be, it seems to me,
Nor must you call my language cruel,
It seems—excuse my girlish glee—
Consistency's a lovely jewel.

Baron Alfred T. de T.,
I know you're proud your name to own,
Your pride is yet no mate for mine,
My blood is finer than your own;
You'll bid me break your heart again
For pastime e'er to town I go,
I'll not do that, my noble lord,
But give you something that I owe.

Baron Alfred T. de T.,
When you were in that angry fit
You turned to me and thundered out,
"Go, teach the orphan girl to knit;"
I am an orphan girl myself,
And that my knitting you may see,
Here is a mitten that I've knit—
Excuse my gushing girlish glee.

CAMILLA.

BOOMING A CHEESE FACTORY.—Messrs. Fleming and Hannah are booming a cheese factory to be established at Camilla, and, up to date they have the milk of about one hundred and twenty five promised. They will have to get about two hundred cows before such a factory will materialize. We hope they will get the necessary number and that success will crown their efforts

REID'S RUNAWAY.—George Reid, the sweet warbler of this locality, was driving from his farm in Amaranth one day last week and had an exciting time. We don't know whether he was singing at the time or not; but when opposite Forsyth's corner the horses began to run for all they were worth. George wasn't in the rig at the time, but his father was and he was thrown out and received a severe shaking-up.

PERSONAL.—Mr. Charles Curtis is spending a few days at home with his parents. Mr. Harry Culp, Etta Patterson, John Scott, Robert Kyle and John Anderson are spending their Xmas holidays at home.... Jos. Robinson and Jos. Meredith have just returned from Toronto after delivering a load of lambs.

ON THE SICK LIST.—Our esteemed friend, Rev. F. Burt of Cardwell, has been laid up with sickness for the past few days, and was unable to attend the annual entertainment of St. Albian's church which was held on the 22nd. We hope soon to be able to chronicle the rev. gentleman's recovery.

[illegible] I—Our lodge of the Patrons of Industry is progressing favorably and the members are quite jubilent. They have a unique program for next Wednesday night.

[illegible] STREET.—Our school is being improved and improvisated by a partition being put in order to preserve the tympanic membrane of the next headmaster

ON E. J. I.—Mr E. J. Cobean has a new (second-hand) delivery sleigh; he also has a new horse and a big boy (?) to run it. The sleigh has been at Orangeville twice. He got it in Shelburne at Sinclair's sale.

THE CLERGY WILL SMILE.—Judging from present appearances it is safe to predict that there are some more couples who will employ the clergymen for a short time. Rake your brains Camillaites, by guessing who they'll be.

NOT IN IT.—We are sorry that Mr. James Parks is not in the field for the council, because he would make a good member. McCluskey and Laird are running a terrific race and we want to see them both elected. Whoop 'er up, boys, there are good times coming!

FAREWELL.—At the closing of school our teachers were the recipients of valuable presents. Mr. Hewitt has taught here three years and Mr. Bremner one. The former received a handsome chair and the latter a gold watch-chain and neck-scarf. Both replied to the addresses in a few words, and there was scarcely a dry eye among the scholars. Mr. Walker takes Mr. Hewitt's place and Miss Lemon takes Mr. Bremner's.

How the Pyramids Were Built.

A moneyed man, who was looking yesterday at the process of laying an artificial stone pavement in front of one of his many properties, startled the friends who were standing about him by remarking: "I believe that the Egyptian pyramids were built in just that way." Pressed for an explanation, he said that while he had never been in Egypt he had read the works of all Egyptologists, including Bragsch and Piazzi Smyth, and had never found in any of them a theory which would satisfactorily account for the manner in which the pyramids were constructed. "Now," he said, "you must remember that the pyramids are made of stone which bears no resemblance to anything found within five hundred miles of their location. It is incredible that the Egyptians of four or five thousand years ago should have possessed the mechanical ingenuity to move these enormous blocks of stone from the granite quarries of Abyssinia or Syria to the pyramids. Is it not much more natural to suppose that the ancient Egyptians possessed the secret of making artificial stone, and that the pyramids were constructed by layer upon layer of Nile River mud, hardened by just such processes as we employ to make artificial stone? It is a much more plausible explanation of their construction than the laborious and uninteligent supositions that the stones were carried across the desert to form the foundation and base of the pyramids. I firmly believe that the Egyptians of the ante-Christian era understood the manufacture of artificial stone, and that they built the pyramids out of it."—Philadelphia Press.

New Use for Cotton Seed Oil.

If the method of charging cotton seed oil with lead, which is said to have been discovered, is found practicable, the value of this abundant product will be greatly increased. The process as at present defined is of the utmost simplicity. One gallon of pure cotton seed oil is placed in a suitable iron vessel, into which 20 pounds of molten lead is poured in. After a thorough stirring the lead separates into globules, and when the oil has been poured off, after cooling, there is found to be about 17 pounds of the lead, the remainder being absorbed by the oil. On the lead being again melted, and the operation repeated to the fifth pouring—the amount of lead absorbed being lessened each succeeding pouring—the total amount of lead absorbed is about ten pounds. The oil thus charged with the lead is then used as a paint, being applied in the ordinary way to metallic surfaces. It is claimed that the liquid, which adheres closely and becomes very hard, is especially useful in protecting metal from oxidisation or corrosion.

"Now is the winter of our discontent made glorious summer" by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This wonderful medicine so invigorates the system and enriches the blood that cold weather becomes positively enjoyable Arctic explorers would do well to make note of this.

Some days ago we noticed in the Toronto papers particulars of the arrest of a man in that city who had visited several stores, and in the hurry of business was enabled to swindle shopmen out of the price of the goods bought. His game was to present a $10 bill in payment, requesting $5 in part change, and then to object to the form of the remainder, and in the end get the whole of his $10 back. We understand that a well known trickster is trying the same game here, and, therefore, deem it our duty to caution merchants and others against such tricks. In the Toronto case, the man caught was sent to jail, and we hope the same result will follow here if the game is continued. —Guelph Mercury.

Colonel David Wylie, the veteran news-paper man, popularly known as the father of the Canadian press, died at Brockville on Monday, aged 81 years. The large part of his life was spent in Brockville, having come over here to take charge of the Recorder newspaper in 1849, and with which he was connected as proprietor editor until 1883. Up to two years ago Mr. Wylie's life continued to be one of activity, when his health began to fail, and for upwards of a year past he had been confined to the house and latterly to his room. On Saturday last his condition became worse, and he gradually sank into insensibility, breathing his last, as already stated, shortly after 11 o'clock Monday morning. The funeral took place Wednesday afternoon under Masonic auspices.

While exploring some accounts in the Bank of Montreal a few days ago Mayor Geldie of Guelph came across an open account of the cemetery committee of 1856, 25 years ago, and, best of all there was $56.92 standing to its credit. How the money has remained so long without being brought to the notice of the city is not known. The cemetery committee of this year will take steps to appropriate it for the use for which it was intended.

THE BEST FAMILY PILL IN USE

Keep the Works in good order.

NEWCASTLE, Ont., January 15, 1890.

W. H. COMSTOCK, Brockville, Ont.

DEAR SIR,—Your Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills are the best regulator for the system that humanity can use. Life is at the time-piece; frail and delicate as many of its works. A few particles of foreign substance adhered to the smallest wheel in the works, and what is the result?—at first, only a slight difference is perceptible in its time-keeping, but week upon week the obstruction grows, the irregularity becomes greater, until at last, what would have been regulated with little trouble, in the beginning, will now require much care in thoroughly cleansing the entire works. So it is in human life—A slight derangement is neglected, it grows and increases, imperceptibly at first, then rapidly, until what could, in the beginning, have been cured with little trouble, becomes almost fatal. To prevent this, I advise all to purify the system frequently, by the use of Morse's Pills, and so preserve vigor and vitality.

Yours faithfully,
H. F. ATWELL.

The Best Rock Salt, for Stock.

Read what Prof. Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, says regarding proper ways of salting stock:—"Dairy cattle should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has convinced me that when cows are denied salt for a period of even one week they will yield from 10 to 14 per cent. less milk, and that of an inferior quality. Such milk will, on an average, then sour in twenty four hours less time than milk drawn from the same or similar cows receiving salt every day, all other conditions of treatment being equal."

THE only chemically pure Salt ever discovered, analyzed 99 84-100 Pure Salt. All kinds of stock will do better where this Salt is used; one ton will go four times as far as common salt, hence it is cheaper. It is the Great Salt in the world for the preservation of all kinds of meat, all the large packers are using it. It is sold cheaper than any other lump salt. We guarantee this Salt as advertised. Make a trial and you will always use it; we have in stock fine and coarse, at

NASAL BALM

It is a certain and speedy cure for Cold in the Head in its worst form.

SOOTHING. CLEANSING. HEALING.

Instant Relief, Permanent Cure, Failure Impossible.

Catarrhal diseases are slightly contagious, and are induced by a foul condition of the atmosphere breathed through the nasal passages, by which the delicate membrane becomes irritated, and a copious secretion of mucus is the result. Ordinary cases are speedily cured by the first application of Nasal Balm, which allays the irritation, cleanses the nasal passages, and leaves a healthy condition. Chronic cases of long standing, which have resisted all other treatment, yield to the healing and curative properties of Nasal Balm, which adheres to the membrane, and is carried by the current of air to the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a disease of the mucous membrane, and Nasal Balm is the only remedy which reaches the affected parts. I was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could eat an

—OR— TRUE TO THE LAST.

CHAPTER XXVII.

And what was it speaking to Sir Hilton's heart on a journey in a sad, low voice? What is it now speaking aloud to this bitter cry of anguish, in these clasping arms, in this pale wasted face? It is a truth, the whispering of which he thrust away with a strong hand, but it will be heard at last, for as his blood curdles beneath the sound, it cries to him in a voice of thunder, though the aged woman whose trembling arms are clasped about his neck, utters it in the lowest whisper that can touch his ear.

"Hilton," said Lady Trewavas, "Olive is innocent. John was the man—your brother! And he is hidden here—not in his right mind at times—mad, miserable, dying!"

He was in the library, whither she had drawn him, when she told him this; and as she spoke she pointed to the old arched door hiding the spiral stairs.

Staggering as though he had been struck, and cowering beneath the blow, Sir Hilton sank into a chair, and turned upon her a face of ghastly woe, with dumb lips that quivered but found no language.

"Will you go to him?" said Lady Trewavas. "He expects you."

Go to him!—go to whom? His brother?—a murderer! and a Trewavas! No, it could not be. He was dreaming, as he had dreamed on the weary journey, when Olive, with white lips, said what his mother had uttered now, "John is the man!" He tried to speak; but his voice, husky, low, unnatural, scarce obeyed his will.

"Mother, Olive is innocent, you say. Did she guess the truth?—did she know——"

Words failed, but his eyes turned to that ghastly door which did their woe.

"I think she knew," said Lady Trewavas.

There was a stifled sob in her throat, and her wrinkled hands clasped passionately, and she sank down in despair.

"And knowing, she yet suffered this great continuely, this frightful wrong, this hideous shame and pain?" said Sir Hilton.

"Yes; knowing the truth, she suffered all that for our sakes, Hilton."

The sob could not be checked now; and with a burst of anguish, Lady Trewavas struck her bosom with the clenched hands, as though she would beat back the pain into her heart, or die.

"For our sakes!" repeated Sir Hilton. "Then Heaven help me! for I am a broken man, beaten down with the weapons of my own pride. Upon this fragile girl has fallen the penalty of all our sins. And I love her as I always did. Oh! Olive, Olive, you have smitten me to the earth!"

Slowly down, down to his very knees, drooped his bowed head, while his agony called for tears that could not, would not come. No, the torture on him was like a fire, burning heart and brain; and starting up, to bear his anguish erect, he paced the room restlessly.

"If I had believed her," said he, "If I had only spoken one kind word, if I had given her that kiss of peace for which she prayed so humbly, if I had even only touched her hand in mercy, I might now bear to think of her. But no; blind, stubborn, cruel to the last, I never gave her one sign of compassion or of love. And for me she suffered even my contumely; for a Trewavas, and to spare this house, she endured all things, even our desertion and our hate. Mother, it is I who am mad, not John."

His voice swelled in passion, rolling like waters that gather strength as they rush to their fall; then he stopped his hurried walk, and went on more brokenly, in a more gentle tone.

"Give me time," he said, "I cannot go to that man just yet. My mind is shaken, bewildered, filled with horror. Forgive me, mother, it is of you I should think. I am sorry for you—in your old age, such a shame as this to fall upon you! And Olive—what were we saying of Olive? She tried to save you—to save us all. For nearly a year she has bore our shame, our pain, the brand of our crime; and she has been hunted from country to country, driven from every shelter, thrust out from every friendship; and one word, one whisper of truth, would have saved her from all sorrow; yet she would not speak of it! Great Heavens! and I have despised her! I have thought her not good enough to be a wife of a Trewavas! Oh, why did she not blast me with the truth, as I stood in my blind hard pride before her? Why did she not say, 'John is the man; your brother, John Trewavas! and I will proclaim his crime, and bring your name and your pride down to the very dust.' Oh, if she had only turned upon me once, with one bitter or taunting word, I could bear this sorrow better; but now my cup is full, and I drink the gall to the dregs. Mother, she has heaped fire upon my head—this weak girl that we despised. I can never look her in the face again. Do you know that in exile and loneliness she has borne the sharpest pangs of poverty, and suffered sickness? Oh, she is so changed and wasted, that I could hold her in the grasp of my hand; and her face has a white and weary look upon it that cuts me to the heart. To save my pride she has borne this. To keep the Trewavas name from infamy, to guard our foolish false honor from the dust, she went forth an outcast, bowed down by our shame. Perhaps she will die! Who can say that she will live, having suffered so much for me? Oh, Olive! Olive!"

* * * * *

There was a slight noise in the still chamber, and John turned his haggard face from the wall, and saw the tall form of his brother standing in the doorway. There was a momentary flash of terror in his mild eyes, then that faded, and he clasped his hands above his head with a vacant smile. This he did to show Sir Hilton that he expected no brother's greeting, no friendly clasp of hand in hand; he, the guilty outcast, asked of him only a shelter in which to die.

Neither spoke for a moment; each was gazing on the wreck of the other, and the hearts of both were full.

In John's confused mind and dimmed brain there seemed to float shapes and voices which he should never hear again.

"Are you married?" he said to his brother; "and have you brought your wife here to see what she and you have made me?"

Sir Hilton's spirit quailed, and he rested his hand against the arched doorway to steady his trembling frame.

"John," said he in a hollow voice, "I dare not say that I am guiltless; but I solemnly aver that I was ignorant. I never thought to see you thus."

John raised himself on his elbow, and stared fixedly in Sir Hilton's face. In that look of recognition memory returned, and a groan escaped his lips.

"To see me thus," he murmured; "a hunted beast, fearing for this miserable life! No, you never thought it; you were happy and careless; you trampled on Olive, and on me. Eleanor, you know, is dead."

With a quiver of the lip, he stopped suddenly, while an expression of terrible anguish sprang into his haggard eyes.

"Oh, if I could forget—forget—forget!" he shrieked. "It is a mercy to be mad; it is when my reason returns that I feel mad. Hilton, you know I am not so sensible as I once was; but there are times when it all comes back to me—all."

"Be comforted, John," he whispered. "The mercy of God is infinite."

But with the touch of his hand—with the old fraternal embrace of boyhood—John's thoughts had gone back to days long buried and half forgotten.

"Don't row to day, Hilton; the sea is rough. I have a new cricket ball. Come and try it."

He said this with the very look upon his face it had worn in childhood, and he put his arm around Sir Hilton with a feeble smile.

Touched more by the childish words than by the most passionate prayer for pardon, Sir Hilton strove vainly to repress his emotion.

"But where is Olive?" continued John, with a childish eagerness in his eyes. "We cannot play without Olive! Fetch her, Hilton—fetch Olive."

Sir Hilton trembled, and there rose up in his heart a voiceless cry that echoed, Olive! Olive!

"I would fetch her, John," he said softly, "Heaven knows how willingly, if I could—I would her, never to leave us more."

But with the sound of his voice John's woe—his reason—returned.

Removing Sir Hilton's arm from his neck, ashamed that kindness should be shown to such a wretch as he, his head sank back upon the pillow, and he said feebly, but with perfect composure, "You come home, Hilton, to a sad sight, and to a terrible duty; I have only waited for your return to confess my guilt; you must send for a magistrate, and let him take my deposition."

A sob rose in Sir Hilton's throat, which seemed to rend his heart: it was the last cry of his pride, ere it was torn from him forever. To this was he come now, that he must send for his neighbors and friends to let them hear his brother confess himself a murderer.

"I will do it, John," he said, in a broken voice; "but do you know the consequences of such an act? It will be the duty of the magistrate who hears your confession to commit you to the county goal."

"I know it," answered the guilty man, with a ghastly look. "But I must make some expiation before I die. I have cared for the old name, Hilton—I have indeed—else I would have told the truth at once; I would not have suffered all this horror. Oh—mercy!—this horror!" he reiterated, shuddering, and hiding his face from the light.

Sir Hilton's lips quivered as he looked down upon him.

"Never mind your name now, John," he said; "think of yourself. It is right I should tell you that, except Dr. Burton, and two of the servants, no one is aware of you being here. And I have no reason to believe these suspect the truth; perhaps, therefore, you may yet escape if you will."

"And do you wish me to die in silence and loneliness, she has borne the sharpest pangs of poverty, and suffered sickness? Oh, she is so changed and wasted, that I could hold her in the grasp of my hand; and her face has a white and weary look upon it that cuts me to the heart. To save my pride she has borne this. I have cared for the old name, Hilton—I have indeed—else I would have told the truth at once; I would not have suffered all this horror. Oh—mercy!—this horror!" he reiterated, shuddering, and hiding his face from the light.

Sir Hilton's lips quivered as he looked down upon him.

"Never mind your name now, John," he said; "think of yourself. It is right I should tell you that, except Dr. Burton, and two of the servants, no one is aware of you being here. And I have no reason to believe these suspect the truth; perhaps, therefore, you may yet escape if you will."

"And do you wish me to die in silence?" asked John, with his eyes fixed on his brother's face.

"No," returned Sir Hilton, firmly. "If you can bear the anguish of a felon, John, I can. I shall go with you, and stand by you to the last."

John pressed his brother's hand, and smiled faintly.

"No prison will keep me long, Hilton," he murmured; "the prison waiting for me is the grave, and whether this is hereditary treachery, or a crazed and dark dungeon, who shall say? But I cannot face it—I cannot die in peace till I have done Olive justice. Send for her, Hilton. I cannot speak till Olive comes."

"And when she comes, if she will come," said Sir Hilton, "what magistrate shall I send for?"

"Ask Mr. Heriot and Mr. Vigo to come to me," replied John. "What I have to say will not be new to them. They guessed the truth long ago. Hilton, you say I am not suspected; you err; every eye suspected me; every hand was against me when I came here; and, but for Olive, I should have been pointed at on the very day Charles Vigo found her up yonder in the wood. Oh, I want to see Olive's face, and thank her before I die. Fetch her Hilton; fetch her now, at once! The sands are running down so fast, and I float away into eternity, weakly, as I have lived. Oh life, life! thou glorious gift, what have I done with thee? A mistake, Hilton—a hard, bitter, terrible mistake—that is what I have made of my life; and through all eternity I cannot rectify it. Never through a thousand fires can these hands be cleaned!"

He wrung them together tightly, and looked down upon them in a wild way, relapsing into incoherent words, and tossing restlessly from side to side. His unhappy brother fetched the attendant from the room below and left him.

"Who is guilty?" he murmured to himself, as he descended the narrow turret-stairs; "he or I? And poor Elea nor, our victim, is she quite guiltless of her own blood? For two years she played with this poor weak heart, regardless of its sufferings. And at last the passion she had raised and despised turned upon her, and slew her."

Sir Hilton spoke truly; Eleanor Maristowe was not free from blame regarding John Trewavas. Tacitly, she had given him encouragement, partly for her pride's sake to hide where her real love was, and partly because she divined, that while she suffered John's attentions with a pleased air her mother would never refuse an invitation to Trewavas, and it was only at Trewavas she could see Sir Hilton.

Was this girlish selfishness a venial fault? Who would dare to say that any sin is small, could he trace back the source whence have arisen, and do arise, the deadliest battles, the direst events, the cruellest deeds, done in this woeful world?

Lady Trewavas was waiting in the library; and as Sir Hilton closed and locked the old arched door, which shut out from the household the pain of John's presence, she came forward anxiously and laid her hand on his. She had no need to question him; she saw his resolve upon his face.

"Mother," he said firmly, "there is but one thing to do—the innocent must no longer suffer for the guilty, I go at once to Mr. Vigo, and lay this history before him."

"I knew you would do this," she answered. Her voice was scarcely audible, and her lips were colorless; but she made no remonstrance.

"It is the only course; and the duty has its worst sting extracted, because I go by John's own urgent desire. If he had implored me to spare him, my task would be hard indeed," concluded Sir Hilton.

"But John is mad," said Lady Trewavas, eagerly.

"Perhaps so," he answered; "but that is not a question for us to decide. I will defend him on this ground to the utmost. I can do no more, and no less. Take courage, mother, and hope for the best."

These were his parting words before he rode away to Beevigo. It would have been less bitter to him to ride on this errand to Mr. Heriot's, or even to the enemy of his house, Sir Anthony Rockelly; but, in the present phase of his mind, the deepest humiliation seemed the fittest. He would go and confess his brother's cowardly crime to the man whose clear sense had always seen Olive's innocence, and whose noble heart had had courage to defend her.

Deep in thought, Sir Hilton rode with his head bent down, not seeing this very man approaching him. They met midway on the high breezy heath which looked down alike on the woods of Beevigo and the park of Trewavas.

Charles Vigo reined in his horse, and raised his hat gravely.

"Sir Hilton Trewavas, I believe you returned home last night?"

"I did," responded Sir Hilton, in mournful accents.

"Sir Hilton," he continued, "it is my painful duty to inform you that a warrant is in the hands of the county police for the apprehension of Mr. Trewavas. The inspector of this district has long been aware that he is at Trewavas; but precautions having been taken to render his escape impossible, my father and other magistrates, in consideration of Lady Trewavas's great age, deferred the execution of the warrant until your return. Without wishing to take any credit to myself for the act, Sir Hilton, I may add that this concession was granted to me by those high in authority, in return for the great efforts I have made to discover the truth."

Sir Hilton bore this humbly, though the workings of his face showed the terrible struggle within.

"Mr. Vigo," he said, slowly, "for the consideration you and others have shown Lady Trewavas, I thank you in her name. I would not have left her one day alone in this misery, had she made me aware of my unhappy brother's return."

Charles Vigo bowed in token of his knowledge of the fact, and Sir Hilton continued more painfully:

"Mr. Vigo," said he, "I am not ignorant that the efforts you have made to discover the facts of this dire crime were made for Miss Varcoe's sake."

"Entirely for Miss Varcoe's sake," repeated Charles Vigo, "and, certainly without any feelings of rancour towards yourself or your family, Sir Hilton."

"I believe it," returned Sir Hilton, with a deeper and deeper sadness breaking through his tone. "Miss Varcoe, doubtless, gave you every assurance of her innocence; while to spare me what she deemed would be a deeper pain, she refused all explanation of the circumstances——"

"Pardon me," interrupted Charles Vigo, as his face flushed, "Miss Varcoe gave me no explanations, no assurance of innocence, and I should have scorned myself had I asked her a single question."

A burning flush covered Sir Hilton's face to the brow. The noble faith, the entire trust of Charles Vigo's love scorched him with shame.

"And I have asked Miss Varcoe no single question to this day," continued Charles Vigo, a little hurriedly. "I know her feelings too well. I knew she would suffer all things rather than denounce a Trewavas."

In the young man's voice there was a slight ring of bitterness; he did not see the thorns of shame and agony on Sir Hilton's brow; he saw him crowned with the glory and honor of Olive's love.

Did one drop of consolation fall on Sir Hilton's heart in this bitter tone of his? Apparently not, for there was a deeper falter in his voice as he answered, "What Olive has suffered for my family is not unknown to me, Mr. Vigo; but I cannot speak of it."

He broke off, and the trembling of his lip showed he was uttering the simple truth in saying he could not speak of this.

"I fear," he continued, after a moment's silence, "that Miss Varcoe must be the principal witness against my brother, should he live to be tried."

"You are mistaken, Sir Hilton," returned young Vigo. "I have been most careful to spare Miss Varcoe that pain. The evidence of the man Skews, the creature you bribed, will be quite sufficient, and I have received a most sure promise that Miss Varcoe shall not be called."

"Have I this bitter addition to my sufferings?" cried Sir Hilton, turning ghastly pale. "Is it possible you and others believe that I paid Skews to spare John, and not to be silent respecting Olive?"

The sight of his suffering touched Charles Vigo, and he held out his hand in frank sorrow.

"I am grieved, Sir Hilton, that I once thought so," he replied; "but I discovered long ago that I was mistaken and I only named it now to hear you take your own part. That villain Skews has confessed to me that, seeing where your agonized suspicions were fixed, he was careful not to shake them; he thought by that means to get money from Mr. Trewavas as well as yourself."

"Can it be," murmured Sir Hilton, "that, in any honest man's mind, even for a moment, I have appeared as the cowardly villain who could put on a young girl's head a crime which I knew to be committed by my brother? Now indeed my cup is full!"

"You must pardon my thought," resumed Charles Vigo; "you must remember you have ever borne the character of a man inordinately proud of his family and position. To save them, I fancied you might be glad that Olive——"

"No, never!" exclaimed Sir Hilton. "I confess that in my blind pride no guess came into my soul that a Trewavas could be a felon—that a Trewavas could be as weak, as wicked, as miserable as other men. But if my eyes had been opened, and I had known my brother to be as vile and as wretched as the most ignorant, time hardened convict—flesh and blood like us—who dies in his chains unpitied, still I would not have let Olive suffer one hour's false suspicion. Mr. Vigo, I am happy in knowing her innocent; but you are happier, because you knew it from the first."

Charles Vigo raised his hat as though in honor of Olive's name and Olive's innocence, but he made no reply. Then Sir Hilton, in a calmer tone, told of his errand to Beevigo, and begged that he and his father would both come to Trewavas to hear John's confession.

"Would it not be wise to consult with your lawyer before Mr. Trewavas takes this step?" asked Charles.

"No, John thinks himself dying, and he wishes to speak," replied Sir Hilton. "You would say that his dying so will cut him off from all hope; but I believe once our only defence can be humanly, that his deposition will make little difference on the trial. It is not our intention to deny his guilt."

Charles Vigo bowed his head gravely.

"Then, if you wish it," he said, "I will ride back and make known your request to my father, and meanwhile you can go on to Mr. Heriot's. Perhaps it would be painful to you to visit Beevigo. Are you aware that Miss Varcoe is there?"

"No," said Sir Hilton; and his lip shook, and his face grew paler as he spoke.

"She left Paris with the Langleys a few hours after your departure," resumed Charles, "and they are now my father's guests."

"I am glad of it," said Sir Hilton, steadying his voice, "for now she is so near us, Olive surely will not refuse to see the unhappy man, who raves for her incessantly, and yearns to ask her forgiveness."

"You allude to Mr. Trewavas," observed Charles Vigo. "I will tell her what you say; but of course she must herself decide whether or not she can undergo so painful a trial."

Sir Hilton longed to send her a message filled with such passionate, pleading words, that, like strong cords, they should draw her to Trewavas; but he refrained. Surely she had suffered too much for him and his, and he had no right now to lay upon her a feather's burden, or claim a single tear. Gathering up the reins, he bowed gravely to Charles Vigo, and lifted his hat; the young man returned the salute, and they parted, both going on their different ways.

Falling Fast.

DEAR SIRS—My mother was falling very fast after three months' suffering from dropsy, being swollen from head to feet, but after she had used one bottle of your Burdock Blood Bitters it was removed, and she felt quite well. We think there is no better medicine, and are true friends to B. B. B.

SUPPOSE YOU—

Resolve not to sneer at the woman who believes in God and the forms of her religion just because you cannot understand such things.

Resolve not to speak disparagingly of your father and your mother, and do not speak of them as "the gov" and "the old woman."

Resolve to pay all your bills, especially the small trades people.

Resolve not to touch the wine which cheers if you cannot do it within reason; you must know the shame and misery it brings to your womankind.

Resolve not to fight against the voice of conscience, nor to strangle your good impulses, just to do some wrong which will make you unhappy.

Resolve, dear maiden, to "be good, and let who will be clever; do noble things, not dream them all day long."

Resolve to be good, honest and true, knowing that "all good is lovable," and I am sure that the year 1892 and every other year will be happy.

BORAX FOR COLDS.

Try snuffing powdered borax up the nostrils for catarrhal cold in the head. Try taking your cod liver oil in tomato catsup if you want to make it palatable. Try a cloth wrung out from cold water put about the neck at night for a sore throat. Try an extra pair of stockings outside of your shoes when travelling in cold weather. Try walking with your hands behind you if you find yourself becoming bent forward. Try a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda (baking soda) in diarrhœal troubles; give freely. Try a newspaper over your chest, beneath your coat as a chest protector in extremely cold weather.

Improved each day, still there is room for improvement. I intend to devote myself a well directions, I intend to devote myself a well ordered house, and give my attention to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life, and I cannot thank you too much.

"Yours, the undersigned, citizens of Truckway Centre, Mich., know pretty well that the above statement made by Mrs. Jaber, is true in every particular and entitled to full credence."—O. P. Chamberlain, G. W. Waring, G. A. Wells, Druggist.

"My brother, in England, was for a long time unable to attend to his occupation, by reason of nerve on his head. I sent him Ayer's Almanac, and the testimonials it contained induced him to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using it a little while, he was cured, and is now a well man, working in a paper mill at Brisbane, Queensland, Australia."—A. Attswell, Sherbrot Lake, Ontario.

—your brother! And he is hidden here—not in his right mind at times—mad, miserable, dying!"

He was in the library, whither she had drawn him, when she told him this; and as she spoke she pointed to the old arched door hiding the spiral stairs.

Staggering as though he had been struck, and cowering beneath the blow, Sir Hilton sank into a chair, and turned upon her a face of ghastly woe, with dumb lips that quivered but found no language.

"Will you go to him?" said Lady Trewavas. "He expects you."

"Go to him!—go to whom? His brother?—a murderer! and a Trewavas! No, it could not be. He was dreaming, as he had dreamed on the weary journey, when Olive, with white lips, said what his mother had uttered now, "John is the man!" He tried to speak; but his voice, husky, low, unnatural, scarce obeyed his will.

"Mother, Olive is innocent, you say. Did she guess the truth?—did she know—"

Words failed, but his eyes turned to that ghastly door which did their work.

"I think she knew," said Lady Trewavas.

There was a stifled sob in her throat, and her wrinkled hands clasped passionately, and she sank down in despair.

"And knowing, she yet suffered this great contumely, this frightful wrong, this hideous shame and pain?" said Sir Hilton.

"Yes; knowing the truth, she suffered all that for our sakes, Hilton."

The sob could not be checked now; and with a burst of anguish, Lady Trewavas struck her bosom with her clenched hands, as though she would beat back the pain into her heart, or die.

"For our sake!" repeated Sir Hilton. "Then Heaven help me! for I am a broken man, beaten down with the weapons of my own pride. Upon this fragile girl has fallen the penalty of all our sins. And I love her as I always did. Oh! Olive, Olive, you have smitten me to the earth!"

Slowly down, down to his very knees, drooped his bowed head, while his agony called for tears that could not, would not come. No, the torture on him was like a fire, burning heart and brain; and starting up, to bear his anguish erect, he paced the room restlessly.

"If I had believed her," said he, "If I had only spoken one kind word, if I had given her that kiss of peace for which she prayed so humbly, if I had even only touched her hand in mercy, I might now bear to think of her. But no; blind, stubborn, cruel to the last, I never gave her one sign of compassion or of love. And for me she suffered even my contumely; for a Trewavas, and to spare this house, she endured all things, even our desertion and our hate. Mother, it is I who am mad, not John."

His voice swelled in passion, rolling like waters that gather strength as they rush to their fall; then he stopped his hurried walk, and went on more brokenly, in a more gentle tone.

"Give me time," he said, "I cannot go to that man just yet. My mind is shaken, bewildered, filled with horror. Forgive me, mother, it is of you I should think. I am sorry for you—th your old age, such a shame as this to fall upon you! And Olive—what were we saying of Olive? She tried to save you—to save us all. For nearly a year she has born our shame, our pain, the brand of our crime; and she has been hunted from country to country, driven from every shelter, thrust out from every friendship; and one word, one whisper of truth, would have saved her from all sorrow; yet she would not speak of it! Great Heavens! and I have despised her! I have thought her not good enough to be a wife of a Trewavas! Oh, why did she not blast me with the truth, as I stood in my blind hard pride before her? Why did she not say, "John is the man; your brother, John Trewavas! and I will proclaim his crime, and bring your name and your pride down to the very dust." Oh, if she had only turned upon me one, with one bitter or taunting word, I could bear this sorrow better; but now my cup is full, and I drink the gall to the dregs. Mother, she has heaped fire upon my head—this weak girl that we despised. I can never look her in band; he, the guilty coward, hunted him only a shelter in which to die.

Neither spoke for a moment; each was gazing on the wreck of the other, and the hearts of both were full.

In John's confused mind and dimmed brain there seemed to float shapes and voices which he should never hear again.

"Are you married?" he said to his brother; "and have you brought your wife here to see what she and you have made me?"

Sir Hilton's spirit quelled, and he rested his hand against the arched doorway to steady his trembling frame.

"John," said he in a hollow voice, "I dare not say that I am guiltless; but I solemnly swear that I was ignorant. I never thought to see you then."

John raised himself on his elbow, and stared fixedly in Sir Hilton's face. In that look of recognition memory returned, and a groan escaped his lips.

"To see me thus," he murmured; "a hunted beast, fearing for this miserable life! No, you never thought it; you were happy and careless; you trampled on Olive, and on me. Eleanor, you know, is dead."

With a quiver of the lip, he stopped suddenly, while an expression of terrible anguish sprang into his haggard eyes.

"Oh, if I could forget—forget—forget!" he shrieked. "It is a mercy to be mad; it is when my reason returns that I feel mad. Hilton, you know I am not so sensible as I once was; but there are times when it all comes back to me—all."

"Be comforted, John," he whispered.

"The mercy of God is infinite."

But with the touch of his hand—with the old fraternal embrace of boyhood—John's thoughts had gone back to days long buried and half forgotten.

"Don't row to day, Hilton; the sea is rough. I have a new cricket ball. Come and try it."

He said this with the very look upon his face it had worn in childhood, and he put his arm around Sir Hilton with a feeble smile.

Touched more by the childish words than by the most passionate prayer for pardon, Sir Hilton strove vainly to repress his emotion.

"But where is Olive?" continued John, with a childish eagerness in his eyes. "We cannot play without Olive! Fetch her, Hilton—fetch Olive."

Sir Hilton trembled, and there rose up in his heart a voiceless cry that echoed, Olive! Olive!

"I would fetch her, John," he said softly, "Heaven knows how willingly, if I could—I would her, never to leave us more."

But with the sound of his voice John's woe—his reason—returned.

Removing Sir Hilton's arm from his neck, ashamed that kindness should be shown to such a wretch as he, his head sank back upon the pillow, and he said feebly, but with perfect composure, "You come home, Hilton, to a sad sight, and to a terrible duty; I have only waited for your return to confess my guilt; you must send for a magistrate, and let him take my deposition."

A sob rose in Sir Hilton's throat, which seemed to rend his heart: it was the last cry of his pride, ere it was torn from him forever. To this was he come now, that he must send for his neighbors and friends to let them hear his brother confess himself a murderer.

"I will do it, John," he said, in a broken voice; "but do you know the consequences of such an act? Is will be the duty of the magistrate who hears your confession to commit you to the county goal."

"I know it," answered the guilty man, with a ghastly look. "But I must make some expiation before I die. I have cared for the old name, Hilton—I have indeed—else I would have told the truth at once; I would not have suffered all this horror. Oh mercy!—this horror!" he reiterated, shuddering, and hiding his face from the light.

Sir Hilton's lips quivered as he looked down upon him.

"Never mind your name now, John," he said; "think of yourself. It is right I should tell you that, except Dr. Burton, and two of the servants, no one is aware of you being here. And I have no reason to believe those suspect the truth; perhaps, therefore, you may yet escape if you will."

"And do you wish me to die in ob-

and, but for Olive, I would have pointed at us on the very day Charles Vigo found her up yonder in the wood. Oh, I want to see Olive's face, and think her before I die. Fetch her Hilton; fetch her now, at once! The sands are running down so fast, and I float away into eternity, weakly, as I have lived. Oh life, life! then glorious gift, what have I done with thee? A mistake, Hilton—a hard, bitter, terrible mistake—that is what I have made of my life; and through all eternity, I cannot rectify it. Never through a thousand fires can those hands be cleansed!"

He wrung them together tightly, and looked down upon them in a wild way, relapsing into incoherent words, and tossing restlessly from side to side. His unhappy brother fetched the attendant from the room below and left him.

"Who is guilty?" he murmured to himself, as he descended the narrow turret-stairs; "he or I? And poor Elea nor, our victim, is she quite guiltless of her own blood? For two years she played with this poor weak heart, regardless of its sufferings. And at last the passion she had raised and despised turned upon her, and slew her."

Sir Hilton spoke truly; Eleanor Mariotowe was not free from blame regarding John Trewavas. Vanity, she had given him encouragement, partly for her pride's sake to hide where her real love was, and partly because she divined, that while she suffered John's attentions with a pleased air her mother would never refuse an invitation to Trewavas, and it was only at Trewavas she could see Sir Hilton.

Was this girlish willfulness a venial fault? Who would dare to say that any sin is small, could he trace back the source whence have arisen, and do arise, the deadliest battles, the direst events, the cruellest deeds, done in this woeful world?

Lady Trewavas was waiting in the library; and as Sir Hilton closed and locked the old arched door, which shut out from the household the pain of John's presence, she came forward anxiously and laid her hand on his. She had no need to question him; she saw his resolve upon his face.

"Mother," he said firmly, "there is but one thing to do—the innocent must no longer suffer for the guilty, I go at once to Mr. Vigo, and lay this history before him."

"I know you would do this," she answered. Her voice was scarcely audible, and her lips were colorless; but she made no remonstrance.

"It is the only course; and the duty has its worst sting extracted, because I go by John's own urgent desire. If he had implored me to spare him, my task would be hard indeed," concluded Sir Hilton.

"But John is mad," said Lady Trewavas, eagerly.

"Perhaps so," he answered; "but that is not a question for us to decide. I will defend him on this ground to the utmost. I can do no more, and so lose. Take courage, mother, and hope for the best."

These were his parting words before he rode away to Bosvigo. It would have been less bitter to him to ride on this errand to Mr. Heriot's, or even to the enemy of his house, Sir Anthony Roskilly; but, in the present phase of his mind, the deepest humiliation seemed the fittest. He would go and confess his brother's cowardly crime to the man whose clear sense had always seen Olive's innocence, and whose noble heart had had courage to defend her.

Deep in thought, Sir Hilton rode with his hand bent down, not seeing this very man approaching him. They met midway on the high breezy heath which looked down alike on the woods of Bosvigo and the park of Trewavas.

Charles Vigo reined in his horse, and raised his hat gravely.

"Sir Hilton Trewavas, I believe you returned home last night?"

"I did," responded Sir Hilton, in mournful accents.

"Sir Hilton," he continued, "it is my painful duty to inform you that a warrant is in the hands of the county police for the apprehension of Mr. Trewavas. The inspector of this district has long been aware that he is at Trewavas; but precautions having been taken to render his escape impossible, repeated Charles Vigo, "without any feelings of resentment towards yourself or your family, Sir Hilton."

---

"I believe it," returned Sir Hilton, with a deeper and deeper sadness breaking through his tone. "Miss Vereoe, doubtless, gave you every assurance of her innocence; while to spare me what she deemed would be a deeper pain, she refused all explanation of the circumstances——"

"Pardon me," interrupted Charles Vigo, as his face flushed, "Miss Vereoe gave me no explanations, no assurances of innocence, and I should have scorned myself had I asked her a single question."

A burning flush covered Sir Hilton's face to the brow. The noble faith, the entire trust of Charles Vigo's love scorched him with shame.

"And I have asked Miss Vereoe no single question to this day," continued Charles Vigo, a little hurriedly. "I know her feelings too well. I knew she would suffer all things rather than denounce a Trewavas."

In the young man's voice there was a slight ring of bitterness; he did not see the thorns of shame and agony on Sir Hilton's brow; he saw him crowned with the glory and honor of Olive's love.

Did one drop of consolation fall on Sir Hilton's heart in this bitter tone of his? Apparently not, for there was a deeper bitter in his voice as he answered, "What Olive has suffered for my family is not unknown to me, Mr. Vigo; but I cannot speak of it."

He broke off, and the trembling of his lip showed he was uttering the simple truth in saying he could not speak of this.

"I fear," he continued, after a moment's silence, "that Miss Vereoe must be the principal witness against my brother, should he live to be tried."

"You are mistaken, Sir Hilton," returned young Vigo. "I have been most careful to spare Miss Vereoe that pain. The evidence of the man Skews, the creature you bribed, will be quite sufficient, and I have received a most sure promise that Miss Vereoe shall not be called."

"Have I this bitter addition to my sufferings?" cried Sir Hilton, turning ghastly pale. "Is it possible you and others believe that I paid Skews to spare John, and not to be silent respecting Olive?"

The sight of his suffering touched Charles Vigo, and he held out his hand in frank sorrow.

"I am grieved, Sir Hilton, that I once thought so," he replied; "but I discovered long ago that I was mistaken and I only named it now to hear you take your own part. That villain Skews has confessed to me that, seeing where your agonized suspicions were fixed, he was careful not to shake them; he thought by that means to get money from Mr. Trewavas as well as yourself."

"Can it be," murmured Sir Hilton, "that, in any honest man's mind, even for a moment, I have appeared as the cowardly villain who could put on a young girl's head a crime which I knew to be committed by my brother? Now indeed my cup is full!"

"You must pardon my thought," resumed Charles Vigo; "you must remember you have ever borne the character of a man inordinately proud of his family and position. To save them, I fancied you might be glad that Olive——"

"No, never!" exclaimed Sir Hilton. "I confess that in my blind pride no guess crept into my soul that a Trewavas could be a felon—that a Trewavas could be so weak, so wicked, so miserable as other men. But if my eyes had been opened, and I had known my brother to be as vile and as wretched as the most ignorant, time hardened convict—flesh and blood like us—who dies in his chains unpitied, still I would not have let Olive suffer one hour's false suspicion. Mr. Vigo, I am happy in knowing her innocent; but you are happier, because you knew it from the first."

Charles Vigo raised his hat as though in honor of Olive's name and Olive's innocence, but he made no reply. Then Sir Hilton, in a calmer tone, told of his errand to Bosvigo, and hoped that he and his father would both come to Tre-sees the unhappy man, who raves for her incessantly, and yearns to ask her forgiveness."

"You allude to Mr. Trewavas," observed Charles Vigo. "I will tell her what you say; but of course she must herself decide whether or not she can undergo so painful a trial."

Sir Hilton longed to send her a message filled with such passionate, pleading words, that, like strong cords, they should draw her to Trewavas; but he refrained. Surely she had suffered too much for him and his, and he had no right now to lay upon her a feather's burden, or claim a single tear. Gathering up the reins, he bowed gravely to Charles Vigo, and lifted his hat; the young man returned the salute, and they parted, both going on their different ways.

Failing Fast.

DEAR SIRS—My mother was failing very fast after three months' suffering from dropsy, being swollen from head to foot, but after she had used one bottle of your Burdock Blood Bitters it was removed, and she felt quite well. We think there is no better medicine, and are true friends to B. B. B.

MISS LAVINIA TAYLOR,
177 Jamieson Av., Parkdale,
Toronto, Ont.

SUPPOSE YOU—

Resolve not to meet at the women who believes in God and the forces of her religion just because you cannot understand such things.

Resolve not to speak disparagingly of your father and your mother, and do not speak of them as "the gov" and "the old woman."

Resolve to pay all your bills, especially the small trades people.

Resolve not to touch the wine which cheers if you cannot do it within reason; you must know the shame and misery it brings to your womankind.

Resolve not to fight against the voice of conscience, nor to strangle your good impulses, just to do some wrong which will make you unhappy.

Resolve, dear maiden, to "be good, and let who will be clever; do noble things, not dream them all day long."

Resolve to be good, honest and true, knowing that "all good is lovable," and I am sure that the year 1892 and every other year will be happy.

BORAX FOR COLDS.

Try snuffing powdered borax up the nostrils for catarrhal cold in the head. Try taking your cod liver oil in tomato catsup if you want to make it palatable. Try a cloth wrung out from cold water put about the neck at night for a sore throat. Try an extra pair of stockings outside of your shoes when travelling in cold weather. Try walking with your hands behind you if you find yourself becoming bent forward. Try a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda (baking soda) in diarrheal troubles, give freely. Try a newspaper over your chest, beneath your coat as a chest protector in extremely cold weather.

The best emolytes and expectorant for the cure of colds and coughs and all throat, lung, and bronchial troubles, is, undoubtedly, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Ask your druggist for it, and, at the same time, for Ayer's Almanac, which is free to all.

TOILET HINTS.

Almond meal sprinkled in the bath makes the skin soft and white.

A harmless lotion for removing freckles is as follows:—Lemon juice, one ounce; powdered borax, one-half drachm, sugar, one half drachm.

An excellent lotion for imparting a rosy glow to the cheeks by calling the blood to the surface consists of tincture of benzoin, one tablespoonful; rose water, three ounces. Apply to the cheeks daily.

For chapped hands the following is a most excellent remedy:—Camphor gum, three drams; beeswax, three drams; spermaceti, three drams; olive oil, two ounces. Put in a pan, set in boiling water until melted, and apply to the hands.

A harmless lotion for whitening and softening the complexion is made as follows:—Cucurilla powder, two grains; carbonate of ammonia, two grains; emulsion of almonds, eight ounces. Apply with a soft handkerchief.

Winter Sports.

The gay winter season opens many to attacks of colds, coughs, hoarseness, tightness of the chest, stiffness, bronchitis, etc., which require a reliable remedy like Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam for their relief and cure. Known as suitable for over thirty years. The best cough cure.

NOTABLES DEAD.

Cardinal Manning and the Duke of Clarence and Avondale, eldest son of the Prince of Wales, died at two minutes past nine o'clock this (Thursday) morning. Both the patients were suffering from congestion of the lungs.

DUFFERIN'S POOR.

The condition of our jail in relation to the poor incarcerated therein imperatively calls for prompt action on the part of our county authorities. The practice of committing unfortunates, whose only crime is poverty, appears to be wholly illegal, but under a fiction of law they are treated as vagrants and are committed by the magistracy of the county without examination or attempt being made to show that the law applies in such cases. Judges and grand juries have time and again inveighed against the inhumanity of imprisoning such persons in the common jail where they are associated within the small corridors fronting the cells with criminals idiots, lunatics and the depraved of all grades. But up to the present no action has been taken to remedy the evil, and matters have gone to such a length in this and other counties that there is every probability of parliament being asked to pass an act making it obligatory upon counties to provide accomodation for the poor within their borders. When we think of the hundreds of committals on such grounds within the short life of this county it cannot be doubted that a poor house is a crying necessity. We have no complaints to make against the jailer, matron or other officers, they have done all in their power for such unfortunates; but the want of proper air and exercise in the present quarters cannot be otherwise than detrimental to those in feeble health, and all of the poor creatures and their days in the gloom of the small corridor or darkness of the smaller cells. Here is a list of unfortunates who breathed their last in Dufferin's great combination of jail, asylum and poor house:

No darker page has ever been printed in a news paper or one which reflects more disredit upon the christianity and humanity of the people, and more particularly upon our county representatives. As we have seen the dark plumed hearse leave our jail door with the mortal remains of another unfortunate to fill a pauper's grave we have often felt how true it is that

Man's inhumanity to man
Makes countless thousands mourn.

The hearse comes, the hearse goes; no one asks who of God's poor has gone to his or her last reckoning; then follows the usual inquest and the usual verdict of "died of natural causes." It is the old sad refrain:

"Battle his bones over the stones,
He's a pauper whom nobody owns."

But this must come to an end. The county must make better provision for the poor or the government must come to their rescue and oblige the county to do what christianity and civilization says should have been done years ago.

The cost of such an undertaking should not be an element in determining the duty of the council, but even in that aspect of the situation there is nothing alarming, and if a reasonable scheme was presented, the taxpayers would cheerfully grant the necessary means to carry out such a laudable necessity. This is the more easy of accomplishment, since the passage of an act relating to the establishment of houses of refuge, passed in 1890, whereby assistance may be rendered by the government to the extent of $4,000, and which sum would be available if proper steps are taken to secure the same, and by the same act, provision is made for two or more counties to combine in the construction and maintenance of a house of refuge on an equal basis or upon terms to be mutually agreed upon. And to our mind it should be the first duty of our county council at its first session to appoint a committee to form a scheme whereby so worthy an object can be accomplished. We feel sure that if the county council [illegible] a committee [illegible] appointed [illegible] county, and with the [illegible] grant from the government a basis of an agreement could be settled upon whereby both counties would have the benefit of a suitable house of refuge at a nominal cost, and that the future maintenance would not be a burden on either county.

If this scheme were carried out great benefits would follow and the cost of our jail maintenance would be reduced to a nominal sum, which would go far to make up our proportion of the poor house expenses.

We eagerly look to some of the younger members of our county council who will take their seats for the first time to bring this most important matter before the council and to press forward until success shall crown their efforts. No brighter laurel has ever been won by any councillor than will be earned by the one who shall champion the cause of the poor, the friendless and the oppressed, and to procure for those amongst us who have not where to lay their heads a home where for their declining years they shall have the necessaries and mayhap some of the comforts of life.

CALEDON ON TOP!

The Court of Appeal Decides Against Algie and Ward.

THE COSTS ARE HEAVY.

All Four Judges Unanimous in Their Finding.

WE the case was taken to the Supreme Court?—It is Rumored this is the Intention.

The great litigation resulting from the memorable feed at Alton in November, 1889, is over at last and the township of Caledon has come out victorious. The action was tried before Justice McMahon in Orangeville over a year ago and the plaintiffs, Algie and Ward of Alton, had the suit decided in their favor. The township carried the case to the court of appeal and the judges reversed the decision. It is now rumored that the plaintiffs will appeal to the supreme court. The costs of the action now amounts to over $3000 and Messrs. Algie and Ward are liable for the costs.

The Toronto dailies report the case thus:

Ward v. Township of Caledon; Algie v. Township of Caledon.—Judgment on appeal by the defendants, the township of Caledon from the judgment of Mac Mahon, J., the trial judge, in favour of the plaintiffs as against the appellants, with recourse over against the defendants Joseph and Chester McLelland. The actions were brought by Benjamin Ward and William Algie against the township corporation to recover damages incurred by the breaking away of part of a dam on the Credit river, near the village of Alton, called McLelland's dam. The defendants McLelland were added as such on the application of the township. The plaintiff Ward is the owner of a woollen mill on the Credit, about a quarter of a mile east of McLelland's dam, and the plaintiff Algie is also the owner of a woollen mill several hundred yards below Ward's. Both plaintiffs had built dams, which were destroyed by a flood on the 13th of November, 1889. The plaintiffs alleged that the township corporation had allowed the owners of McLelland's mill to erect a dam across the highway between the fourth and fifth concessions, by which the water was penned back for the use of the mill. The plaintiffs' case was that the township corporation, by consenting to the high way being used as a reservoir, and causing and permitting a dangerous volume of water to accumulate on their highway, became responsible to the plaintiffs for the damage occasioned by reason of the defective and negligent construction of the dam, which caused it to break and thereby caused the damage by flooding complained of. The defendants McLelland appealed from the part of the judgment awarding the township relief over. Appeal allowed and plaintiffs' actions dismissed with costs, it being held that the building of the dam and the raising of the level of the water was not a wrong on the part of the municipality or of the mill owner for which the plaintiffs can recover in an action of this nature. The real wrong was the negligence of the mill owner in the defective building and in the non repair of the dam, and for this wrong the licensors cannot be held liable. The action against the third parties brought in by the municipality fails with the action against the original defendants, but the township is ordered to pay the costs of these third parties on the ground that bringing them in was an unnecessary precaution. Mowat, Q. C., A. G., and Robinson, Q. C., for the appellants, the township of Caledon; James Reeve, Q. C., and W. J. L. McKay (Orangeville), for the appellant McLelland; Moss, Q. C., and W. L. Walsh (Orangeville), for the respondent Algie; E. Myers (Orangeville), for the respondent Ward.

ENTERTAINED THEIR CHIEF.

High Chief Ranger Towe Remembered by Court Gardiner C. O. F.

The handsome hall of Court Gardiner Canadian Order of Foresters, in the Kerr block was the scene of a very happy event on Tuesday evening. As THE SUN announced last week High Chief Ranger Ed. Towe of London was expected to pay the local lodge a fraternal visit, and in this the brethren were not disappointed. A large number was present and when High Chief Ranger Towe, accompanied by Chief Ranger T. W. Chapman, entered the hall he was received with great honors. After some routine business was transacted one candidate was initiated into the mysteries of Forestry. Bro. Towe delivered a brief address and an adjournment to the Paisley house was made. The proprietor had an excellent spread prepared and the brethren did full justice to the same. When the inner man was satisfied Chief Ranger Chapman was called to the chair and Dr. Fraser to the vice chair. "The Queen" was duly honored and the chairman proposed the toast of "Our Guest," to which Bro. Towe responded in an able and learned address on the grand principles of the Canadian Order of Foresters. The high chief ranger spoke for an hour and fifteen minutes and delivered the speech of the evening. "The Foresters" were praised by Messrs. Wilson, Ross and Dr. Fraser and "The Merchantile" interests were upheld by Messrs. J. S. Haley and R. Robinson. "The Ladies" found able exponents in A. J. Turnbull and S. Marsh, and the interests of "The Press" were attended to by R. McGuire of the Post and J. Foley of THE SUN. After the toast list was exhausted a hearty vote of thanks was tendered the high chief ranger, to which he replied in a few pleasing words. A very happy time was spent by the brethren and it was nearly 2 o'clock in the morning before the gathering dispersed.

High Chief Ranger Towe was the guest of Chief Ranger Chapman during his stay in town.

MONO MILLS.

A GOOD HOSTELRY.—Mr. John Aldous conducts a first-class hotel and the travellers realize this fact. John is a genial host and his obliging better half sets a spread that any of your town hotels well might envy.

A SUCCESS.—The concert given here on Friday night in aid of the Mono Mills brass band was, taking all things into consideration, a success. The program was long, too long in fact, and the audience was well nigh weary before it was completed. No matter how successful concerts under the auspices of the band are one thing is certain, and that is that Mono Mills cannot support a band alone, the town is too small. We hope the institution will prosper, but we're afraid of it. After the concert a dance was held in Downs' tavern and a rye old time was spent by the gay dancers.

DISTRICT MEETING.—The annual meeting of the L. O. L. for the Caledon district was held in the Orange hall here on Tuesday, and was very largely attended. Some important business was transacted and the election of officers was then proceeded with, which resulted as follows: J. J. White, D. M.; W. R. Nichol, D. D. M.; D. C. McKinnon; R. S.; J. A. Patterson, F. S.; Rev. W. H. Madill, C.; Jos. Warnock, D. C.; W. L. Wilson, W. J. Allen, committee. After all the business was gone through with the brethren adjourned to Mr. John Aldons' hotel, where an excellent supper awaited them. Full justice was done to the good things and then speech making was in order. We regret that we are not in a position to give a full report of the speeches, which were above the general run. The brethren spent a jolly time and were loath to seperate. Everything in connection with the order in this district is in a satisfactory condition.

ALL ARE INVITED.—Anniversary services will be held in the Methodist church at Mono Mills on Sunday and Monday next, Jan. 17 and 18. At half-past 6 o'clock Sabbath evening Rev. Geo. H. Long of Boissevain, Man., will preach the anniversary sermon. A grand entertainment and tea will take place in the Orange hall on Monday evening, when select music will be furnished by Misses. ## MONO CENTRE.

GO DRY.—A fashionable wedding will take place here shortly. Particulars later.

PERSONAL.—Mr. Herb. Cotton late of the Orangeville model school has charge of No. 7. We believe Herb. has made a good beginning and hope the future will be bright.....Mr. John Sears who has been spending his vacation with his parents here has returned to Binghampton where he will no doubt wield the borsh with telling effect.

SETTING THEM UP.—Municipal matters are settled for another year and the green table at the Centre will be surrounded by a new set of fathers in future, who will no doubt manage the affairs of state in an efficient manner. The ex-officers appear perfectly satisfied with the new council. Mr Snell has made a gallant fight and will surely feel proud of his handsome majority. People were sorry that they were compelled to decide between two such men as Mr. Island and Mr. Snell, but when a choice was to be made Mr. Snell's former courage and grit in the hand to hand conflict with Squire Wilson was not forgotten and he was rewarded accordingly. He has proven himself an able administrator in the capacity of deputy reeve and will in all probability prove himself worthy of the trust which the electors have seen fit to repose in him.....Mr. Dynes has efficiently filled the second deputy reeve's chair for the past two years and as a vacancy occurred Mr. Dynes deserves promotion. We are glad to see him in that position which we believe, judging from the past record, he will fill creditably.....Mr. Sill has served the banner township for six years (and as he says himself) the ratepayers decided that he must "up" or "out," so he choose the former and is now second deputy-reeve without opposition. Mr. Sill is not very pretentious, but we venture to say that the electors can trust "Dary" for a sensible vote..... What the two councillors will do remains to be seen, but we hope they will prove themselves worthy of the hearty support they received on Monday. Rosemont ward has got what they have long looked for "a man," although at one time were dull. We hope the bill will be filled by Mr. McNabb. Mr. McCluskey who is highly spoken of, feels the responsibility of the position to the extent of 322 votes and says he feels his position keenly.....We are sorry our old friend, Joe Reid, has retired from public life, as we believe we would have plumped for Joe had he been in it. Joe made an A I councillor and the electors are just awaking to the fact.....As we are close at hand, Mr. Editor, we will just post you on how these sages conduct themselves from time to time.

WHAT THEY'RE SAYING.

Its a Tory organization to the root; in Mono a Grit may be elected pound-keeper or the like once in a decade, but that's about his destination.—Leidlaw.

Pshaw! A'd go out an show me sell an do the bit I could.—Tom Wilson.

Ay! just that Mr. Wolson, I always do what I can and I'll bet you four dullers at Joe Henry ill do the same next year.—Gray.

I knocked out Jim's vote my way. —Joe Henry.

See the majority for Snell that I piled up at Elba. Actions speak louder than words.—Willie Glover.

At Elder I bewitched not only the widows, but also the maidens with Dr. Island and George Halbert thrown in and see the result.—Alf. Glover.

I did a share of the work, but get no credit for it. There's more money some place else than electioneering.—Charlie Maguire.

I condescended to exercise my mighty and all prevailing influence and to devote my superfluous time to forwarding the interests of Mr. Island, but people do not appreciate influence even if it is lavished upon them.—Dandy Bob.

Man div ye see we've been snowed under again.—Barclay.

SALEM.

SICK.—Mr. J. Foster is suffering from an attack of la grippe, but we hope he will soon recover his wonted health. La grippe is coming back here again and it is likely our people's heads will be dizzy for a few weeks.

GONE TO OWEN SOUND.—Mr. Edward Island, son of ex-Deputy reeve Island of Mono, has gone to Owen Sound to take a six months' course at the business college. The night before he left a large number of the boys and girls assembled at Mr. Island's residence to give Eddie a grand send off. Dancing was the principal feature of the evening, and everybody enjoyed it immensely. At midnight an inviting repast was partaken of, after which dancing was resumed and kept up till daylight appeared. We wish our young friend every success at the Sound.

AN EFFICIENT TEACHER.—Miss Etta Patterson, our efficient school teacher, has entered upon her duties for another year, and we hope she will give as good satisfaction this term as she did during the last. Since the young lady has been amongst us she has only chastised one pupil, and that poor innocent kid forgot to go to school one day and somebody said he was playing hookey. Thus sometimes the innocent receive punishment (?) thats intended for the guilty. Sam has it on reliable authority that the teacher almost wept when the terrible ordeal was ended while the little culprit chuckled in his sleeve.

WOOD BEE AND DANCE.—On Friday Mr. Joseph Foster, 1st line east, had a wood bee, a large number of neighbors attending it. The boys worked like nailers and towards supper-time a great pile of wood stood up as a monument of their work. After tea the boys and the young ladies set the dance going and kept it up until about 4 o'clock the following morning. During the evening guests from Orangeville and other places arrived and it goes without saying that a good time was spent by all. The two Cardwell Jacks, Messrs. McMaster and Bracken, gave several exhibitions of step-dancing and were applauded to the echo. It might be worth remarking just here that the girls of this section of the banner township are several degrees handsomer than the fair sex of other parts, and it is no wonder the shy young men's heart flutters as he tries to keep the conversation overflowing with interest. Prudentes Island, Hugh Hughson, and Bob Dodds officiated at the violins and Profs. McMaster, Bracken, Sam Island and A. J. Marshall sang the dances off to perfection. The fun came to a close too soon to suit most of the dancers, but before departing Mr. and Mrs. Foster were tendered a hearty vote of thanks.

MONTHLY'S SHAM.

PARDON US!—Mr. Editor, we must confess that we have been too lazy of late as regards giving the news of this burg to the many readers of THE SUN, but we hereby vow and pledge ourselves by all that is in us from the top of our adjacent head to the sole of our feet, to be more faithful scribs in the future. We have been roused up and roused pretty well and sifted out again with musical eastern that we had almost forgotten—or had not time to contribute to the newsy columns of Dufferin's popular local paper.

SAD OFF.—Mr. Wm. Rowe, our enterprising butcher and baker, has sold out his business here to Mr. J. Matthews of Redistville. We welcome Mr. Matthews in our little town as a citizen and business man.

SPECIAL SERVICES.—Revival meetings are in progress in the Methodist church under the management of Rev. Jas. B. Wilson, S. A., L. L. B. The spiritual and moral standing of this community have long enough needed an elevation, and we hope that much good may be achieved.

IS IT DEFUNCT?—As your humble correspondent travels on his regular journeys, and has occasion to have a little chit chatting with his customers, the slumbering question is, "What has become of the Farmers' grist mill?" Some of our local millers predicted long ago that it would die away at a premature age, and some seem to think it is now at the rooks of Mulmur.

HOLIDAY - GREETING.—Old and young, rich and poor, great and small, proud and humble, fat and lean, learned and illiterate, from various parts of our fair Dominion and the U. S., have been and are holidaying at the "hollow." Familiar faces that have not seen each other for many years have smiled upon each other and caused hearts to throb with happiness during this festal season. To go into details would take too much of your valuable space, so we merely let you know that the place is alive with visitors of all shapes, sizes, ranks and professions.

SATISFIED "SWAMPERS."—The township election is over and the inhabitants of the swamps in the new survey have had their innings, consequently they should be satisfied. Our council of 1891 was a noble body—each member being a six footer—but this year of grace one of the shining lights, who hailed from this quarter, was left out and a little fellow little more than half his size dropped in his shoes, and the boots are entirely too big for him. Just to please the swampers of the west. Well, every dog has its day, and why not let our tamarac friends have theirs?

A PIONEER GONE.—Notwithstanding the vast amount of merriment that prevails at this season of revolving time, occasions present themselves accompanied with tidings of solemnity and gloom. On New Year's eve, as the air was full of joyful sounds and jovial soliloquies, old Mr. Augustus Bates, in his 86th year, passed away with the old year. Deceased was one of the oldest settlers of Melancthon township, having helped to cut and open a direct road from Hamilton to the little lake upon the shores of which Horning's Mills is built, about the time of Mackenzie's Rebellion. He was never married and of late had been living with his niece. The remains were taken to Burlington for interment.

BRIEFS.—We have not much sleighing and the roads at present writing are pretty slippery.....Between the lake, ponds and streams there is plenty of room for our scientific skaters to exercise themselves.....Our townsman, M. W. L. Roberts, has been appointed trustee of our far-famed public school .....Considerable sickness prevails in this neighborhood at present. Send up some of your M. D.'s, Mr. Editor, to improve the physical condition of our population.....Our P. S. opened up on the 4th inst., with a new staff of teachers and we hope our trustees have secured a suitable staff this time.....We notice our energetic miller, Mr. Jas. Huxtable, is doing a large business in the shipment of flour.....More anon.

CAUGHT ON A BARBED WIRE FENCE.—At Toronto on Wednesday night of last week James Shaver, a German, was running to catch the T. G. & B. northbound train when he met with a mishap that might have resulted far more serious than it did. He was in the act of jumping a fence, which was decorated with a line of barbed wire, when his foot slipped and his face came in contact with the pronged and was badly lacerated, his lower lip being hanging in three pieces. He was under the influence of liquor and while on the train endeavored to pull off the hanging flesh. Some friends brought him up in Dr. Henry's surgery to have his wounds dressed and it required a great number of stitches to make the injured man's face resemble that of a human being.

DUFFERIN'S POOR.

The condition of our jail in relation to the poor incarcerated therein imperatively calls for prompt action on the part of our county corporation. The practice of committing unfortunates, whose only crime is poverty, appears to be wholly illegal, but under a fiction of law they are treated as vagrants and are committed by the magistracy of the county without examination or attempt being made to show that the law applies in such cases. Judges and grand juries have time and again inveighed against the inhumanity of imprisoning such persons in the common jail where they are associated within the small corridors fronting the cells with criminals, idiots, lunatics and the depraved of all grades. But up to the present no action has been taken to remedy the evil, and matters have gone to such a length in this and other counties that there is every probability of parliament being asked to pass an act making it obligatory upon counties to provide accommodation for the poor within their borders. When we think of the hundreds of committals on such ground within the short life of this county it cannot be doubted that a poor house is a crying necessity. We have no complaints to make against the jailer, matron or other officers, they have done all in their power for such unfortunates; but the want of proper air and exercise in the present quarters cannot be otherwise than detrimental to those in feeble health, and all of the poor creatures end their days in the gloom of the small corridor or darkness of the smaller cells. Here is a list of unfortunates who breathed their last in Dufferin's great combination of jail, asylum and poor house:

No darker page has ever been printed in a news paper or one which reflects more discredit upon the christianity and humanity of the people, and more particularly upon our county representatives. As we have seen the dark pinned hearse leave our jail door with the mortal remains of another unfortunate to fill a pauper's grave we have often felt how true it is that

Makes countless thousands mourn.

The hearse comes, the hearse goes; no one asks who of God's poor has gone to his or her last reckoning; then follows the usual inquest and the usual verdict of "died of natural causes." It is the old sad refrain:

"Rattle his bones over the stones,
He's a pauper whom nobody owns."

But this must come to an end. The county must make better provision for the poor or the government must come to their rescue and oblige the county to do what christianity and civilization says should have been done years ago.

The cost of such an undertaking should not be an element in determining the duty of the council, but even in that aspect of the situation there is nothing alarming, and if a reasonable scheme was presented, the taxpayers would cheerfully grant the necessary means to carry out such a laudable necessity. This is the more easy of accomplishment, since the passage of an act relating to the establishment of houses of refuge, passed in 1890, whereby assistance may be rendered by the government to the extent of $4,000, and which sum would be available if proper steps are taken to secure the same, and by the same act, provision is made for two or more counties to combine in the construction and maintenance of a house of refuge on an equal basis or upon terms to be mutually agreed upon. And to our mind it should be the first duty of our county council at its first session to appoint a committee to form a scheme whereby so worthy an object can be accomplished. We feel sure that all the county council [illegible] county, and with the Government in the government a basis of an agreement could be settled upon whereby both counties would have the benefit of a suitable house of refuge at a nominal cost, and that the future maintenance would not be a burden on either county.

If this scheme were carried out great benefits would follow and the cost of our jail maintenance would be reduced to a nominal sum, which would go far to make up our proportion of the poor house expenses.

We eagerly look to some of the younger members of our county council who will take their seats for the first time to bring this most important matter before the council and to press forward until success shall crown their efforts. No brighter laurel has ever been won by any councillor than will be earned by the one who shall champion the cause of the poor, the friendless and the oppressed, and to procure for those amongst us who have not where to lay their heads a home where for their declining years they shall have the necessaries and maybe some of the comforts of life.

The great Republican meeting held in the Immacolata Hall on Sunday last was the memorable meeting of November 1, 1891, in which the township of Caledon and the township of Albion were concerned. The case was tried before Justice McMahon in Orangeville over a year ago and the plaintiffs, Algie and Ward of Albion, had the suit decided in their favor. The township carried the case to the court of appeal and the judgment reversed the decision. It is now rumored that the plaintiffs will appeal to the supreme court. The costs of the action now amounts to over $3000 and Messrs. Algie and Ward are in for the costs.

The Toronto dailies report the case thus:

Ward v. Township of Caledon; Algie v. Township of Caledon.—Judgment on appeal by the defendants, the township of Caledon from the judgment of Mac Mahon, J., the trial judge, in favour of the plaintiffs as against the appellants, with recovery over against the defendants Joseph and Chester McLelland. The actions were brought by Benjamin Ward and William Algie against the township corporation to recover damages incurred by the breaking away of part of a dam on the Credit river, near the village of Alton, called McLelland's dam. The defendants McLelland were added as such on the application of the township. The plaintiff Ward is the owner of a woollen mill on the Credit, about a quarter of a mile east of McLelland's dam, and the plaintiff Algie is also the owner of a woollen mill several hundred yards below Ward's. Both plaintiffs had built dams, which were destroyed by a flood on the 13th of November, 1889. The plaintiffs alleged that the township corporation had allowed the owners of McLelland's mill to erect a dam across the highway between the fourth and fifth concessions, by which the water was pounded back for the use of the mill. The plaintiffs' case was that the township corporation, by consenting to the high way being used as a reservoir, and causing and permitting a dangerous volume of water to accumulate on their highway, became responsible to the plaintiffs for the damage occasioned by reason of the defective and negligent construction of the dam, which caused it to break and thereby caused the damage by flooding complained of. The defendants McLelland appealed from the part of the judgment awarding the township relief over. Appeal allowed and plaintiffs' actions dismissed with costs, it being held that the building of the dam and the raising of the level of the water was not a wrong on the part of the municipality or of the mill owner for which the plaintiffs can recover in an action of this nature. The real wrong was the negligence of the mill owner in the defective building and in the subsequent neglect to make the repairs of the dam, and for this wrong the licensors cannot be held liable. The action against the third parties brought in by the municipality falls with the action against the original defendants, but the township is ordered to pay the costs of these third parties on the ground that bringing them in was an unnecessary precaution. Mowat, Q.C., A. G., and Robinson, Q. C., for the appellants, the township of Caledon; James Reeve, Q. C., and W. J. L. McKay (Orangeville), for the appellant McLelland; Moss, Q. C., and W. L. Walsh (Orangeville), for the respondent Algie; E. Myers (Orangeville), for the respondent Ward.

During Christmas week the young lady was met by her father in Buffalo and they proceeded South to spend the holidays with her sister at Talapoosa. The immediate cause of her death was convulsions induced by the sudden change of climate, she being sick only fifteen hours. Miss Frank was a lady of pleasant disposition and was highly thought of by her many friends in this town. She held a diploma as a trained nurse, having completed a course at the city hospital of Providence, R. I., and being awarded the highest honors. The remains were brought home on Tuesday and were interred in the family plot at Boston, Peel county. Mr. C. J. Wheelock, Dr. and Mrs. Frank, Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Mercer of this town attended the funeral.

With his thumb, a boy is said to have saved the Netherlands from inundation. Many people have been saved from the invasion of disease by a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine imparts tone to the system and strengthens every organ and fibre of the body.

THE BRIDESMAID "SPLICED."

An Amusing Mistake that Occurred at a Wedding in Orangeville Recently.

A very amusing episode took place in this town quite recently and one which some people will regard as a serious and unfortunate mishap. At weddings it is frequently the case that bridesmaids step to the place where the bride should be, but the mistake is generally noticed before the ceremony is completed and matters are set right. But THE SUN's matrimonial commissioner learned of a wedding that was consummated here during the past month where the bridesmaid was "spliced" to the man who intended to wed the girl who came to wait upon. The bride, groom, bridesmaid and best man reside at Toronto and they took a jaunt up to Dufferin's busy capital to have the silken knot tied. One of our popular divines was called upon to perform the delightful ceremony and he was only too glad to comply with the "rattled" groom's request. Just the mistake of their lifetime occurred when the quartette arranged themselves before the pastor. The bridesmaid stood where the bride should have been and the clergyman asked the usual questions. The parties answered all the questions satisfactorily and they were pronounced man and wife. They returned to their city home and the mistake was not noticed until the groom read the marriage certificate. After a consultation another ceremony was agreed upon. It took place a few days ago and everything went "as merry as a marriage bell."

CARDWELL.

SICK.—On the sick list are: Mr. W. E. Hall, Mr. J. Henderson, Mrs. G. South, Mrs. R. Jackson, Rev. F. Burt and others.

PERSONAL.—Mr. William South has returned from Minneapolis, U. S. A.... Miss Nellie Burt has resumed her studies in Woman's medical college, Kingston.

NEW CITIZENS.—Mr. James South has fallen heir to the old homestead and will be a Cardwellite in future. Mr. Richard Moffatt of Scarborough has purchased the Hewitt farm for the sum of $3000 and will move in shortly. Welcome to our midst, gentlemen; you will find the Cardwellites magnanimous, benevolent and kind.

A PLEASANT TIME.—The long talked of Christmas tree entertainment was held at the residence of Mr. John Leighton on Wednesday evening the 6th inst. The figures on the program were well rendered, especially those by the Orangevillians. After full justice was done to the good things dancing and other amusements were indulged in until near daylight the following morning.

A SLIGHT ERROR.—R. Kidd, in fifth line of last week's Cardwell correspondence, should read R. Reid. A meeting of the trustees of Cardwell school section was held at the residence of Mr. W. Jackson, one of the trustees, on Friday last to select a site for the school house, which will be erected shortly, and to transact other business in connection with the new section. The site fixed upon is the southwest part of lot 11, first concession, west of Hurontario street, Mono.

IT CANNOT BE TRUE.—A rumor is going the rounds to the effect that Mr. John McMaster, a well known and respected gentleman of this place, has been snared in the trap set out by that little bow-and-arrow man who goes by the name of Cupid. It is said the affair is to be consummated the latter part of this or early next month. The young ladies around here are all excited over the rumor, and they cannot talk on the subject without shedding a tear. They all can't have Jack and it is only time thrown away to weep for him. A little bird whispers in our ear that his captivator comes from down the country, but J. B, his intimate friend, says the story is without foundation. Cheer up, girls, one of you may have him yet SERIOUSLY ILL.—Rev. F. Burt is still seriously ill, having exposed himself in clerical duty too soon after a 20 days attack of inflammation. On January 3rd a friend agreed to drive him to two of his out stations, but the severity of the weather that day, and the church being insufficiently heated, struck a chill to both lungs. Persisting in sick visits on Monday and transacting pressing church business on Tuesday morning in the town, developed prostration, forcing him to his bed to rage with influenza of a double type and pneumonia. The medical man expects Mr. Burt to be laid up for some time. St. Matthew's and St. Luke's church will be closed from the 17th inst. on alternate Sundays until further notice.

THOUGHTS.

The men I supported for municipal honors arrived safely.—Robert.

I participated agreeably.—Hugh.

Guess who I took a walk with on the morning of the 7th inst.?—Georgie.

Joe, which will you or me escort the doctor from the next festival?—Robbie.

I'm lonely to-night, love, without you and I sigh for one glance of your eye.—Freddie.

I told her not to be afraid, I would guard her with my life, and I thought how happy I would be if she'd be my wife.—Tommie.

THEY ARE STILL COMING.—Our old friends and subscribers still keep coming in and renewing their subscriptions to THE SUN, which is undoubtedly the popular paper of this county. Mr. R. Perfect of the Perfect house, Springbrook, Mr. Jno. Armstrong of Caledon and Mr. B. Beatty of Hockley have been reading the paper for 31 years and have renewed for the 32nd time. Mr. McCluskey, one of the councillors elect for Mono, has been a subscriber for over a quarter of a century, and, of course, he would not be without it. Mr. Jas. Harshaw, also of the banner township, came in and planked down his dollar like a little man. Mr. Harshaw's late father helped move the plant of this establishment to Orangeville, and the paper has been a regular caller at their house since the first edition was distributed.

THEY ARE STILL COMING.—Our old friends and subscribers still keep coming in and renewing their subscriptions to THE SUN, which is undoubtedly the popular paper of this county. Mr. R. Perfect of the Perfect house, Springbrook, Mr. Jno. Armstrong of Caledon and Mr. B. Beatty of Hockley have been reading the paper for 31 years and have renewed for the 32nd time. Mr. McCluskey, one of the councillors elect for Mono, has been a subscriber for over a quarter of a century, and, of course, he would not be without it. Mr. Jas. Harshaw, also of the banner township, came in and planked down his dollar like a little man. Mr. Harshaw's late father helped move the plant of this establishment to Orangeville, and the paper has been a regular caller at their house since the first edition was distributed.

CLOSE RELATION BETWEEN SOUND LIVING AND SUCCESSFUL LIVES.

Letter from Judge Hawthorne on Training Force and Time—Value of a Sound Physical Basis—Advice to Parents in Feeding and Dressing.

There is some eccentricity in the make-up of many people that prompts them, even from their early years, to praise unwholesome food and habits to them that are healthy. At meals they will sick, but of sudden they eat but instinctively and unconsciously those dishes that they would better have abstained; and they will show a perverse talent for sleeping when they should wake, waking when they should sleep, starting themselves when they should repose and remaining lethargic when they should be active. All we had to go by was the method of Heaven and Prayer, and other outlaws brought to their preparation for battle; not reflecting that to run a race does not require the same conditions as to stand a two hours' pounding from a giant. At all events, we find a table that might have made even a mediæval baronet rub his chin. Think oatmeal porridge, lean mutton chops, and nothing to drink. That was breakfast. For dinner, lean and rare meat, the least possible quantity of vegetables, stale bread, and no pudding, half a tumbler of water. Cold, leftover meat for supper, bread, the other half of the glass of water. Yes, that was about what we lived on, all the while taking hours of violent exercise in the hot sun. Such things as tobacco, liquor, late hours, puddings, were, of course, not even admitted into our dreams.

Such training as this is alleged, is not even safe. Boys are apt to grow feverish under it, and to beget many boils, and the boils weaken him; and they don't eat enough, because, after a week or two, so

CLOSE RELATION BETWEEN SOUND LIVING AND SUCCESSFUL LIVES.

A Letter From Julian Hawthorne on Training, Pluck and Time—Value of a Sound Physical Basis—Advice in Regard to Smoking and Drinking.

There is some eccentricity in the make-up of many people that prompts them, even from their early years, to prefer unwholesome food and habits to those that are healthy. At meals they will pick, not of choice, but instinctively and unconsciously, those dishes that they would better have untouched; and they will show a perverse talent for sleeping when they should wake, waking when they should sleep, exerting themselves when they should repose, and remaining indolent when they should be active. This is more often not traceable in girls and women than in boys and men, but the latter are not seldom chargeable with it. To reform them is as difficult as to induce water to run up hill—which, however, is not impossible, if enough pressure be brought to bear in the right direction.

Other people, on the contrary, never go wrong in these matters. They are like the famous goldfish of Venetian glass, which detected any poison that came in contact with them. They prefer the simplest and most strengthening things to eat, and always have their bodies in good trim and training. They seem aware of no self-temptation in doing this; they like it. Omnium that would be the height of virtue in what we may call the non-sanitary class is in them as much a matter of course as with animals. Most of them could not tell you whence they derived their hygienic principles; they would say they were not principles but intuitions.

There is a third class who, whatever their diet and habits, are always in robust health; nothing hurts them, one thing is as good for them as another, and whether they live on brandy and pate de foie gras, or on porridge or cold water, they are happy, vigorous, and free from complaints. Such people are incomprehensible and even irritating, for they upset all rules and contradict experience. Fire does not burn or pins prick them; there is some elixir in their blood that renders them superior to the frailties and necessities of ordinary humanity.

But I am not writing for exceptions of any kind, but for the average. The average human being needs instruction, and, if he recognizes its reasonableness, is amenable to it. It is almost as easy for him to go right as to go wrong if he takes himself in time, and it is really of no little importance that he should go right.

THE AUTHOR'S OWN EXPERIENCE.

I was brought up in a place and at a time where and when the temptations to unwholesome luxury were not overpowering. Milk and rice were leading features of my bill of fare till I was 7 years old, and it was not till after that time that I first ate meat. One advantage of such a diet for children is that it diminishes the acuteness of the fevers and other ills that are incident to childhood. I was also "cured" with homeopathic medicine, which many will say is equivalent to going without medicine at all; at any rate, my sickness were [illegible] of long nor dangerous, and early abandoned altogether. Meanwhile, I lived in the country, was allowed to play outdoors as much as I liked, and was carefully washed and scrubbed every day.

[illegible] baths were good, and go to show [illegible] repellent to give a growing child [illegible] that is in the least difficult to digest; [illegible] afford him all the open air possible, [illegible] for the rest, to let him alone a good deal. If you succeed in keeping him out of the way of what would hurt him, he will need little urging towards what is good for him. And if you can keep him in fair order until he is 18 or 21, he will have acquired a strong bias against mischief the rest of his life. By this I do not mean that there is much to be gained by forcing a boy to conform to a rigid or ascetic regimen, by sheer dint of authority. He will resist at heart, and when opportunity occurs he will rebel in act. But sound health has a natural aversion to deleterious things; and few people hanker after what they have never seen or heard of.

Let a boy, in the first place, learn to put a pride in good health—in being in as good condition as his constitution admits of—and then let him be shown how to be so. It is not a long nor a hard lesson, and if it were the hardest lesson in the world, it would still be worth acquiring. But the desire—the ambition—is the main thing.

PREPARE FOR EMERGENCIES.

Now, we are all frail and imperfect creatures at our best; therefore he is more than foolish who fails to maintain himself at his highest notch. A man who is going to run a race on which his life or fortune depends, does not steal forth stealthy at night, and dig ditches and build hedges to defeat himself within next morning.

Yet that is what many of our young fellows do. You have little enough chance of succeeding in life, anyway; but instead of fitting yourselves to make a desperate struggle for it, you upset your stomachs, obfuscate your brains, clog your lungs, degenerate your hearts, and vulgarize your morals at the very outset of your career. Lacking strength, you descend to the refuge of all weak creatures—cunning; you cheat your way to your goal, where you might have fought your way to it. There should never be an hour in your working day when you are not in full possession of such faculties as belong to you. Morning, noon, or afternoon you should be ready and able to do your best work.

Emergencies come when they are not expected, and if your emergency comes to you when you are dull with beer, or qualmish with tobacco, or unnerved from lack of sleep, you will be vanquished in the encounter, and the defeat will not be an honorable one, but entirely dishonorable.

Two things in the world tend to drag you down; one is low example, and the other is the innate tendency to low practices that seems to me by inheritance, or we know not how. These two evil forces are always at work; whereas we are not always on our guard, and are often in imminent peril at the very moment when we imagine ourselves most secure.

Some moral instruction and good books are useful in their way; but they avail little if the flesh and blood of the subject is in a vicious state. I do not mean to imply that a man in sound health and of temperate habits is necessarily a moral man. But I would sooner trust a man who was wholesome in condition and regimen than one who was moral and elevated in his speech, but had a diseased body. The latter might have the theory of good and intend to practice [illegible] gained some practical acquaintance with training. Training, then and there, was [illegible] All we had to go by was the method of Heenan and Sayers, and the eminent trainers in their preparation for battle; not reflecting that to run a race does not require the same conditions as to stand a two hours' pounding from a glove. At all events, we had a table that might have made even a medieval hermit rub his chin. Thick oatmeal porridge, lean rusticus chops, and nothing to drink. That was breakfast. For dinner, lean and rare meat, the least possible quantity of vegetables, stale bread, and no pudding, half a tumbler of water. Cold, half-raw meat for supper, bread, the other half of the glass of water. Yes, that was about what we lived on, all the while taking hours of violent exercise in the hot sun. Such things as tobacco, liquor, late hours, puddings, cakes, of course, not even admitted into our dream.

Such training as this is absurd, it is not even safe. Boys are apt to grow feverish under it, and to beget many boils, and the boils weaken him; and they don't eat enough, because, after a week or two, nature revolts against raw meat and oat-meal, and nothing to drink. Nevertheless, and though I grumbled occasionally and got very thirsty every day, I enjoyed training. It was not only the new sensation of power and tireless energy that it produced, but the pleasure of doing without luxuries—the feeling that I was practising self-abnegation—the satisfaction of forming an arduous resolve and sticking to it like a man, through all temptation. If our training had done nothing else for us, yet we developing our power and constancy of will, it was a thousand times worth going through with.

In my own case, I hated the physical sensations produced by it so well that I remained in a modified state of training all through my college life. That is to say, I ate little or nothing that our contemporary training rules forbid, and indulged myself only in the matter of water, which I drank not to excess, but in reasonable moderation. As I had always lived simply, I was not giving up much that I really cared for, and in truth I was living a far more luxurious life, so far as my physical sanitation went, than the most scientific voluptuary could have experienced. Many people go through life without ever knowing what it is to feel perfect health. I can tell them that, could they know it for an hour, they would be ready to give up all other earthly possessions to retain it. It is so new, delightful, and extraordinary that it can be likened to nothing else.

A PLEA FOR GOOD HABITS.

Four years of training, not too violent, between the ages of 17 and 21, give a man a start in physical well-being that he is a long time in getting over; indeed, unless things go very much against him, he will always feel the good effects. No boy should smoke or drink till he is over 21, and I think 25 is the earliest time to permit those things with safety. Were modern civilization a natural condition, smoking at any rate, and drinking, probably, would be unknown. They are in the nature of stimulants and sedatives, and are employed to spur on jaded nerves, or to stupify them when irritated. Our lives, especially in cities, are so full of excitements and depressions that, in self defense, the feebler among us take to tobacco and drink. To do so is a confession of weakness; but such weakness ought not to be felt by a youth in his early twenties. Only after you have been fairly worsted in the battle between your constitution and your environment, is indulgence of that kind excusable. You will find plenty of people, more or less foolish or vicious, who will urge you to begin a course of cigars and wine at sixteen or earlier. But every sane person must pay a boy who yields to such urging, and everybody despises him.

You must feel some enthusiasm for decent and wholesome living, so that others, seeing you, may follow your good example. We hear a good deal about the evil influence of a vicious example; but I have also observed that the example of a hearty, vigorous, fresh, clean young man is wonderfully contagious. He makes his companions wish to be as healthy, cheerful and serene as he is. Indeed, it is a few men like this who have, practically, created athletics in this country. Thirty years ago, when they were babies, America had no athletics, no gymnasiums, no clubs devoted to outdoor sports. There is no lack of such institutions now, and, as I hasten to add before, we are probably overdoing things a little in some directions. We have our eyes too intently fixed on competition and prizes, and not enough on muscular cultivation from the individual standpoint. But this will correct itself in time.—Julian Hawthorne.

IN MEMORIAM.

[Lines written on the death of James Ferguson, fireman, who was killed in an accident on the C. P. R near Streetsville on May 19, 1891, by Mrs. Johnson, Toronto, whose son, Robert E. Johnson, the engineer, was also killed.]

Little thought Sarah that Thursday evening,
As she bade dear James good-bye,
That o'er five hours had passed away
He'd wing his flight on high.

When he left the Orangeville station
He had not intended to stop,
For he thought on reaching the Junction
That the engine was to go in the shop.

He was ordered out next morning
On a branch of the Credit freight,
No kindly warning came to him
That death would be his fate.

James never thought of danger,
But was firing straight ahead,
When the cow upon the track he saw
Helped to stop the engine's speed.

No time to stop the engine,
The brakes were not all turned,
It was but one dreadful moment
Until the accident occurred.

The coal piled in around them,
There was no chance to jump,
The engine slid upon the ties
And then rolled o'er the dump.

Jim met his death while on duty,
Working bravely to the last,
God's own chosen time to claim him.
Take him home to joy and peace.

Jim, our boy, has gone before us
To a better land than this;
Soon we'll meet to part no more
In that bright and far off shore.

The judges at Osgoode Hall this morning said that they were not vested with jurisdiction to make an order for postponement in Toronto, but promised to do so when they go to Belleville, unless the member should in the meantime recover.

You are liable to have a cough at any time, and no other remedy is so effective as this world-renowned preparation. Its honored, with grateful children, should be without it. Scores of lives are saved every year by its timely use.

Amanda B. Joyner, Northampton, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefit I have derived for my children from the use of Ayer's most excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and had the greatest fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I died that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the first symptoms of throat or lung trouble, they are relieved from disease, and are becoming robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1885 I took a bad cold which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. As a last resort I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been without this medicine. I am fifty years of age, weigh over 180 pounds, and attribute my good health to the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G. W. Kosher, Salem, N. J.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which by repeated exposure, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thos. B. Russell, Secretary Holston Conference and P. E. of the Greeneville District, M. E. I let it go at that.—I saw it was no use.

A Sensible Statement.

SIRS,—Having used your Burdock Blood Bitters successfully for some time past, I must state that for my complaint of biliousness and acid stomach I have never found an equal, and I continue to use it and recommend it to my friends and neighbors.

W. SUTTON, St. Thomas, Ont.

Sir Edwin Arnold says that the hour and a half passed with Walt Whitman at the poet's home in Camden was one of the pleasantest incidents of his American tour. He found the "good, gray poet" rather shabbily and quite unworthily situated, and half buried beneath an avalanche of newspaper and magazines, but though the venerable author spoke of himself as a wreck, Sir Edwin says that he found him one of the most charming of old men.

The Restof Rock Salt, for Stock.

Read what Prof Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says regarding proper ways of making stock pay—"Dairy stalls should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has convinced me that when cows are dosed salt for a period of from one week they will yield from 1½ to 2½ per cent. less milk, and that of an inferior quality. Stock milk will on an average, turn sour in twenty four hours less time than milk drawn from the same or similar cows receiving salt every day, all other conditions of treatment being equal."

THIS is only chemically pure Salt ever discovered, analyzed 99 84-100 Pure Salt. All kinds of stock will do better where this Salt is used; one ton will go four times as far as common salt, hence it is cheaper. It is the finest Salt in the world for the preservation of all kinds of meat, all the large packers are using it. It is sold cheaper than any other lump salt. We guarantee this Salt as advertised. Make a trial and you will always use it; we have in stock fine and coarse, at it easy to administer.

"My little boy lay for months between my knees on his neck and throat from which he suffered terribly. Two physicians attended him, but he grew continually worse under their care, and everybody expected he would die. But I heard of the remarkable cures effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and decided to have my boy try it. Shortly after he began to take this medicine, the abscess commenced healing, and, after using several bottles, he was entirely cured. He is now as healthy and strong as any boy of his age."—William F. Dougherty, Hampton, Va.

"In May last, my youngest child, fourteen months old, began to have sores gather on its head and body. We applied various simple remedies without avail. The sores increased in number and discharged copiously. A physician was called, but the sores continued to multiply until in a few months they nearly covered the child's head and body. At last we began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In a few days a marked change for the better was manifest. The sores ceased to spread, a healthy condition, the discharges were gradually diminished, and finally ceased altogether. The child is healthy, the skin is feather-and its appetite better than we have observed for months."—Frank M. Griffin, Long Point, Texas.

"The formula of Ayer's Sarsaparilla presents, for chronic diseases of almost every kind, the best remedy known to the medical world."—D. M. Wilson, M. D., Wiggs, Arkansas.

TRUE TO THE LAST.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

John sat up in his bed, propped by pillows; near him were Mr. Heriot, with keen face, sharply attentive, and Mr. Vigo earnest and pitiful. By his bedside, close by his pillow, sat Sir Hilton, suppressing with iron force the misery that was eating into his soul, while he supported by word and look his guilty and wretched brother.

In the window, seated at a table, with writing materials before him, was the quiet inspector of police, who so long ago had observed to Mr. Eslick, that "jealousy was a strong passion," and the slayer of Eleanor Maristowe was not far to seek."

"We are ready to hear you, Mr. Trewavas," said Mr. Heriot.

"But where is Olive?" asked John, piteously. "I will say nothing till she comes."

On hearing this, old Mr. Vigo rose and addressed Sir Hilton.

"Miss Varcoe, with Mrs. Langley and my son, is at the little inn at Trewavas church town," he said; "will you allow me to fetch them, Sir Hilton? I brought them thither, anticipating this request on the part of Mr. Trewavas"

Sir Hilton bowed his head in assent, and Mr. Vigo left the room quickly.

For half an hour there was almost a death like silence in that still chamber, then the sound of wheels reached them, echoing through the long avenue of the park, and Sir Hilton, rising hastily, quitted the room by the old oak door on the spiral stairs. In the library he found Lady Trewavas and kindly Mrs Gunning, both silent and pale.

He offered his arm to Lady Trewavas, who laid her trembling hand on it, and together they traversed the hall, and stood on the threshold of the great doors of Trewavas. Here Olive saw them, as with faltering feet and eyes star blinded she came up the steps, leaning on Charles Vigo's arm. Where now were all her dreams of revenge for slights fancied and real? Gone, sunk forever in this sea of sorrow; and profoundly humiliated by the sight of the aged, care worn, quivering figure that stood upon the threshold to do her honor, Olive fell down at her feet, and clasped her knees, looked upon into her furrowed face with streaming eyes Lady Trewavas raised her, and they kissed without a word. Thus, by her own touching grief, did Olive remove from the stricken woman's heart the overwhelming sense of gratitude that burdened it; and in that kiss each felt that all mutual wrongs, all mistakes and faults, were forgiven.

As Olive turned her head she met Sir Hilton's gaze, and he bowed to her as one bows to a queen. To him all worth on earth was enshrined in her, the little, weak, passionate creature, whom he had once deemed too mean to love. And now he dared not hold out his hand to greet her; he dared not utter a word to welcome her to the house from which he had cast her out. Yet a pang, like fire, shot through his heart as he saw Charles Vigo again take his place by her side, and look down proudly on the small white face, uplifted wistfully to his. But Sir Hilton confessed it was just that he should suffer, and that Charles Vigo should be honored; so he held his peace, and quenched his jealousy.

Olive had looked at him but once, yet in that single glance she read that he knew now all she had done and suffered, and she saw that his soul was stooped to the lips in bitterness. Then a kind of shame seized her. In her quick sympathy his sufferings became hers; and the wonder, reverence, and gratitude he felt, oppressed her; and his bleeding pride wounded her likewise. She dreaded to hear a word of thanks from him; she hated what she had done for him; she could not endure to be so high above him in his thoughts. Now she had conquered his pride she wooed him to be proud again. So to hide from him that she saw his pain, and in another moment she found herself mounting the turret stairs, every step of which was to her a monument of agony. In the chamber there broke upon her, through her tears, a vision of John's face—a wild, haggard face, with madness on it, unutterable woe, and death. Then breaking away from some hand that held her, she rushed forward and fell upon her knees, and would have touched him, but he shrieked out, "No, Olive, do not touch me! Say you forgive me, only that, and I can die contented."

With broken sobs, Olive spoke words of peace to him, and then she felt herself lifted from her knees, and saw blind Mrs. Langley's arm around her. Sir Hilton had taken his old place at his brother's side; Lady Trewavas, Charles Vigo, and Mrs Gunning were here, and Olive understood that the trembling woman who supported her had come also only for his sake. Then she rallied all her courage and gathered in her breath to listen, as John's feeble voice broke faintly upon her ear and heart.

Without the breaks and interruptions which fever and earnestness made, we will tell his words.

"Olive, only Olive, knew how I loved her," said he. "She saw how tortured I was—how galled and maddened I was—by jealousy, and by the knowledge of the poor half love Hilton gave her. The blame is not all mine. I loved her first, and for more than two years she tacitly accepted my affection. It was I who rode with her, I to whose arm she clung when weary, or when, in pretty coward ness, she chose to fear some harmless creature of the woods. And this was all deceit, all done to blind Hilton, or to cheat her mother, who liked me best. She thought she could do this, and tread upon me, as upon some poor, some poor harmless worm in her path; she did not think I was a viper, that could turn and sting. As Olive talked to me, with her childish outpouring of passionate words that meant nothing, I was darkening my mind the best way to die. At first I swear I never thought of killing her; that was the mad impulse of a moment; but I did think I would die in her presence, reproaching her with my last breath. Once I was sorely tempted to kill my brother. Hilton you remember the day? We were in the garden, and you maddened me with your blind, careless talk; but Olive, who suspected me, and had greatly watched me of late, had plunged my pistols into the water. This saved him. But it was on that day I resolved Eleanor Maristowe should never be his wife. From his own lips I had heard, he chose her for no great love, but because she fulfilled all the requisites his pride required in a Lady Trewavas; and languidly content with her beauty and affection, he strove through to drive from his heart a deeper passion, which he feared might lead him to a less prudent marriage. My whole nature rebelled at it, and in the warfare that rose up in my soul, order was overthrown. A something—I know not what—fell into ruins within me, and in the chaos I blindly groped for justice. If God would not hear me, and do justice, I would take my cause into my own hand, in deal out justice to myself."

Here John raved somewhat, mingling prayers with his madness; asking why one man, in blind selfishness and pride, should take coldly a blessing which would make another's heaven.

"My lamb, my one ewe lamb!" he cried; "but to him only an image to hang his name and his jewels on, and show to the world as his."

Sir Hilton rested his chin upon his hand, and looked upon the raving man; but he uttered not a word. When a great light pierces the brain, speech is numbed. Olive, watching him, wept.

Then John got calm again, muttering to himself that it was a wrong world, and he had grown warped in it.

"I thought Eleanor would be just," he said, "if I laid theses things before her as I saw them in my own mind. So I watched an opportunity to find her alone, but, knowing Olive followed my steps of late, I took advantge of a burst of temper on her part to lock her in her room. I gave the key to Lady Trewavas, saying carelessly, I was going to fish awhile in the creek. I did not know that, the better to observe me—I believe she thought I meditated suicide. Olive had taken from the library the key of the old door at the foot of the disused stairs. From the creek I saw Eleanor go into the wood, with a book in her hand. I did not follow her at once. I thought over all I would say, the arguments I would use, the prayers, the entreaties I would urge, to make her break off this marriage. Above all, I would be gentle, I said I had poison with me—I had sent to London for it, under Dr. Burton's name, for, if it came to the worst, I would die before the wedding. And now I feared myself so much, that I took the bottle from my pocket, and broke it against a stone, throwing the fragments into the creek; then I went lightly to the wood. I know where to find Eleanor, for in passing me, she had said, 'How hot it is to-day! I am going to the Lady's Bower, the coolest spot in the wood.'

"When I found her, she was weeping and angry. My prayers beat against her heart in vain. At last I reproached her. I told her she had encouraged my love, and made a stepping stone of my brained spirit to reach Hilton. Then she said I lied, and I here that meekly; but seeing she would not spare herself a miserable marriage for my sake, I tried her for her own. I repeated all Hilton's words to me in the garden, and I told her where his real love was: I said this marriage would be a mockery, a gilded misery, and her smiling life a mask to hide her tears. And then, and her sorrows, and her prayers, would all beat against her husband's heart as vainly as mine did now against here.

"Oh, I used strong words, but gentle—I did indeed. Yet they did not melt her, as I thought. She grew harded and harder to me, she opposed to all were cruel; saying more bitter things than brave enough for such words, and I saw her shrinked, and suffered by fear for her shamed, and suffered by fear for her shamed, and

"In May last, my youngest child, fourteen months old, horribly have sores gather on its head and body. We applied various popular remedies without avail. The sores increased in number and discharged copiously. A physician was called, but the sores continued to multiply until in a few months they nearly covered the child's head and body. At last we began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In a few days the marked change for the better was manifest. The sores assumed a more healthy condition, the discharges were gradually diminished, and in a short time disappeared. We know, in darkest midnight,
Over rain beaten sea gathered of home;
The jewels we mourn here are hoarded
Where the moth, and the rust cannot come;
And oft when the sunset is fairest,
We catch, through a rift in the blue,
A far away glimpse of the glories
Of the land where our dreams come true.

There we garnered the prayers of our mothers,
And the soft cradle song that they sung;
There they move in the midst, with white garments,
And faces immortally young.
And out of the orchid of that river,
There sweet hands shall reach us the cup
That leads, through the Valley of Shadow,
To the land where our dreams come true!

So, weeping, we lay down our idols,
And bury our love out of sight,
Though we know, in our hearts, we shall find them
By and by, in the Mansions of Light;
And the salt tears that fall on their ashes,
And blooms in pansy and rue,
Over there shall the lilies immortal,
In the Land Where Our Dreams Come True.

So I watched an opportunity to find her alone, but, knowing Olive followed my steps of late, I took advantge of a burst of temper on her part to look her in her room. I gave the key to Lady Trewavas, saying carelessly, I was going to fish awhile in the creek. I did not know that, the better to observe me—I believe she thought I meditated suicide Olive had taken from the library the key of the old door at the foot of the disused stairs. From the creek I saw Eleanor go into the wood, with a book in her hand. I did not follow her at once. I thought over all I would say, the arguments I would use, the prayers, the entreaties I would urge, to make her break off this marriage. Above all, I would be gentle, I said I had poisoned me—I had sent to London for it, under Dr. Burton's name, for, if it came to the worst, I would die before the wedding. And now I feared myself so much, that I took the bottle from my pocket, and broke it against a stone, throwing the fragments into the creek; then I went lightly to the wood. I knew where to find Eleanor, for in passing me, she had said, 'How hot it is to-day! I am going to the Lady's Bower, the coolest spot in the wood.'

'When I found her, she was weeping and angry. My prayers beat against her heart in vain. At last I reproached her. I told her she had encouraged my love, and made a stepping stone of my broken spirit to reach Hilton. Then she said I lied, and I bore that meekly; but seeing she would not spare herself a miserable marriage for my sake, I tried her for her own. I repeated all Hilton's words to me in the garden, and I told her where his real love was I said this marriage would be a mockery, a gilded misery, and her smiling life a mask to hide her tears. And these, and her sorrows, and her prayers, would all beat against her husband's heart as vainly as mine did now against here.

"Oh, I used strong words, but gentle—I did indeed. Yet they did not melt her, or I thought. She grew harded and harder to me, she opposed to all Stand out of my path, and let me pass."

"But I barred the way, holding down the demon in me with both arms. At that moment I hated her.

"'You shall never be Hilton's wife,' I said, resolutely.

"'You mistake me,' she answered. 'All this only determines me the more to marry him. And I will put such a barrier between you and him, between you and Trewavas, that your presence shall never insult me again. What! am I to bear for ever this insolently interference between me and my affianced husband?'

"'Not insolent,' I said, meekly, 'but well meant, kindly meant, to save you pain.'

"'Insolent!' she repeated, 'and cowardly. Yes, Mr. Trewavas, you are a coward, and as a coward, I despise you!'

"My meekness had given her courage to say this; and, as she spoke, she flung her hand towards me in a contemptuous gesture. Her hand touched me. She did not know what the touch of her hand was to me. I lost my power over that strong demon in me, which some have said since is madness; the cords which held him snapped like threads."

Springing up, John gazed upon his listeners with a haggard face, and then, falling back, shuddering, he went on more wildly.

"Her tranquility would have chained me; that being gone, my fear went too. I seized the hand that had struck me; I flung my arms around her.

"'Not a coward!' I cried. 'Not afraid to die—with you. Let us die together!'

"I struggled with her, dragging her towards the pool. She shrieked aloud, then I put my hand upon her lips, and said, softly, 'Do not shriek; there is no one in the wood but you and I. The very beasts die silently, why should man alone meet death with cries?'

"Holding her thus triumphantly, I could philosophize like—a madman. But she tore my hand and screamed twice, Olive! Olive!' then she fell down at my feet in a death swoon. I thought her dead, and knelt beside her in an agony of joy. The ancient quiet of my life, before I knew her, came back to me in a great wave.

"At that moment her lips shook, her eyelids quivered, and I saw she lived, and my tranquility was a deceit—I was as one enveloped in flames. I cried out that I must save myself—that I must have must have peace, even if she died to give it to me. As I wrung my hands over her white face, I remembered a little phial in my pocket: not poison—oh no! - but something I had bought to use—being a coward—after I had taken poison. I drenched her scarf with this fluid, and held it closely to her lips. She will not suffer now in dying, I said. Then the thought struck me that the shock and chill of the water might bring back consciousness, and at this moment my eyes fell on a crimson cord lying on the grass; I swear I know not how it came there, but I caught it up and tied her wrists.

"There you know the rest. I am faint—I am sick—I can tell no more.

"There was no cry, no sound save the splash of the water; from which I fled madly. I ran through the wood in a time so short, it seemed incredible. I reached the creek, and caught up my fishing pole again. I could not kill my self—the means were gone. The tide was lapping the little rock on which I had spilled that deadly draught, and looking on it with burning eyes, I asked why it had not saved her.

"I went in, I spoke to Lady Trewavas, to the servants, to the gardeners, then leisurely I mounted to my painting room—this one—and here I wrapped the bottle in double paper, and wrote "Carmine" on it. I did not think much about it. I did not care whether it was found or not.

"When I came down I talked with Mrs. Maristowe, and as she spoke of famious and of follies, I heard her daughter's voice shrieking, 'Olive! Olive!' My sense was very dim: I could not why she had called to Olive. And in this same dim, dull way, I rode for Dr. Burton, and sat up that night among the watchers. Going to my room in the morning, I found the packet gone and on the cover Olive's name. Letters, too, were gone from my journal, and sketches were torn away.

'I staggered to a seat, stunned and bewildered. I think it was then my sense came back, and I thought of safety. I began to understand why Eleanor had called to Olive: she must have been in the wood near us—perhaps had seen me—perhaps was trying now to save me. I tore up the rest of my journal and sketch-book, that no one might notice the pages gone, and threw the pieces carelessly among the waste paper. No suspicion touched me through them.

"You know the anguish of the next few days, and how the cord was found cool lost, and suspicion fell on Olive; but you can never, never tell how nobly she bore all this. I was sure now she was in the wood, sure she had seen me; but in her great pity for my shaken reason, my love, and all the suffering that had led to my crime, she uttered no word to speak her horror of it. She never let me know that my guilt was patent to her eyes, though had to others, only she would not touch my hand—I saw that. I knew she bore all the suspicion, shame, and hatred that should have been my portion—bore it silently—took it upon herself gladly, to save suffered so much for love and a mistaken duty.

"Have you written it down—all?" asked John, eagerly, of Mr. Heriot. "I will not spare myself one detail. Let me sign it when it is ready. Hilton, is anything more to tell? You see my how I lived here a coward, letting you think Olive guilty, till fear of Mr. Vigo, and still wilder fears, drove me out, striving to lose myself in a mad world. But I never once forgot myself. I never once escaped the horrible conscience common that I was John Trewavas, the murderer. Ah, what a life I led! Bring me Circe's crew to match it."

And here, for the first time, there rang out that hideous laugh, never uttered by sane or innocent lips, which chills the listener who wanders in the terrible places of the earth where the felon and the madman are kept from sight.

Hearing it, Hilton started up, and with a look, implored Lady Trewavas to take Olive away.

"Ah, let them go," said John, wearily—"they cannot help me. I live in darkness, and their faces will never come to me again, in all my dreams, through a black eternity."

"Our duty is hard," said Mr. Heriot, "but I think, Sir Hilton, you will perceive that we have no alternative but to fulfil it. It is my painful duty to say, that unless Dr. Burton can certify Mr. Trewavas's life will be endangered by the journey, I and my brother magistrate must commit him on his own confession."

"I wish it," said John, eagerly; "I am strong enough to go. I want no certificate. Dr. Burton, never fear my dying on the road. Better be in gaol than have a gaol made of my brother's house. Clear old Trewavas of the felon and the outcastes, and the stain of murder. Clear it, I say, and let me go."

He raved again, and after a short hesitation, Dr. Burton refused to give the certificate the magistrate required.

"There is no doubt of his madness," he said, "but that of course must be proved; and meanwhile," he whispered to Mr. Vigo, "I consider it safer and better for his family that he should be in custody."

Sir Hilton offered bail to any amount, but law and custom would not permit of its being accepted.

"Then I shall go with my brother," he said, calmly, as he bade farewell to the retiring magistrates.

Sir Hilton kept his word. He shrunk from no humiliation now; he seemed to seize the cup with a sort of fever, eager to drink it to the dregs.

"Let me show Olive that I too can suffer," was all his thought, "suffer, and own it just."

So, in the local papers of the day, Olive soon read a clear statement, signed by Sir Hilton's name, in which he set forth his contrition and his shame that his mad brother's guilt should ever have touched her innocence. Here, too, thus publicly, he thanked her for the generous pity and magnanimous forbearance she had shown when falsely accused. And here, too, he asked her forgiveness for all the suffering heaped upon her through her devoted silence and the world's injustice. He wrote generously, largely, not saying a word too many or too few.

Olive wept as she pat down the paper; she saw in this letter the cry of a generous but proud spirit, anxious to suffer for itself, and full of a tender yet angry remorse, that he should blindly have permitted her childish figure to come between him and the fire, and thrust her head in the flame in his stead.

After the great excitement of this letter, and of John's confession, came a lull of many weeks. Olive and all the world knew that Sir Hilton had accompanied his brother, and had taken a lodging close by him, and visited him in prison, and stayed with him every day, except when closely occupied in aiding to prepare his defence; but this was the only fact that passed the prison-house.

What Olive told of her share in that terrible day, it will be better to relate here than in another place.

"When I quitted Eleanor," she said "I was full of scorn and anger; but as my temper ebbed, there came upon a great sorrow for her. Sir Hilton did not love her, I was sure of that; and she would be 'as insane to hang neck lots on'—not boss of his boss, flesh of his flesh. I could have wept for her; and I, the outcaste, would not have changed with her for worlds. In this spirit I thought I would go back, and ask her to forgive my hard words; and, as I still hesitated, I found I had lost the Syrian cord which I had worn as a girdle. 'How I must go back,' I said, 'to find it.' As I retraced my steps slowly, searching always for the cord, I thought I heard a sharp cry; then, in a moment, Eleanor's voice pierced my ears, shrieking, 'Olive! Olive!' It was a cry of such dire fear, that for a moment I stood still in terror, leaning in faint sickness against a tree, my strength gone, my eyes blinded.

"When I recovered from this, all was still as death; and in this silence I ran on in desperate haste towards the Lady's Bower. As I neared it, some thing fell into the water with a heavy splash. On hearing this, I did not faint, or stand still in horror; I rushed and grass, like one bewildered; and wandering on and on, I lost my way, and will thought I was for help. Then I could not go—I could not desecrate John Trewavas. Better die than bring fresh trouble to the roof that had sheltered me; and flinging myself down upon the grass, I wept till my soul died away to me, and I had no more strength. Thus weeping Mr. Vigo found me, and at the sight of a human face, I gathered courage and hope; I began to feel myself that I had not verified that fancy of mine, of a lilies shade beneath the water and the shadow might only be the darkness of the long boughs beneath that ever spread the pool. My heart bounded at the hope, and my agony grew calmer."

"Murder?" I said, within myself—"no, it is impossible. I have been mad to think it. She would have shrieked aloud—have struggled in the water; she could not have died quietly like that. The shadow was the purple shade of the red beech, and I have pierced myself with a grief as vain as shadows.

"With this thought I smiled, as I waved a farewell to Mr. Vigo; but as the great trees hid him from my sight, my heart fell again. Why had I heard the cry, 'Olive? Olive?'—why had John that upon his face which curdled my blood to think of: And this great bell at Trewavas, why did its sounds come flying to greet me? Who was missing?"

"Agonized at every thought, I resolved to avoid meeting any of the household till I had visited John's room and solved my doubts. I crept up to his painting-room. If he were here, and met me quietly, I should know that shadow in the pool was a sick fancy, and Eleanor had only cried to me in terror of his anger. What more likely than, in pleading his cause himself, he should get angry, telling her of her blindness? And perhaps he had threatened her that he would die. I knew he thought of that at times.

"He was not in his painting-room, and the drawing on the easel had not been touched that day. Then I searched for poison, and in a small packet labelled 'Carmine,' I found chloroform. Could he kill himself with this I asked myself. And fearing that, not thinking then how Eleanor had died—I took it with me. You know how heavily this weighed against me in Sir Hilton's mind."

"I know now that Eleanor was missing, and I never questioned myself again whether the shadow in the pool was a fancy or a truth. She was dead, and there only remained to me the power to save Sir Hilton and Lady Trewavas, by my silence, from the deeper anguish of knowing whose hand had done the deed. This feeling impelled me to destroy his journal and sketches. Horror-stricken as I was, the sole clear idea in my mind, was the resolve to save the Trewavas name from the stain of murder."

"When circumstances, and what I had done to save John, had fastened suspicion on myself, words are too weak to tell what I felt—it was a strange mingling of joy and pain—an agony when Sir Hilton looked at me with such bitter loathing—a joy when I saw his pride unbroken, his brother unsuspected.

You will remember the finding the poor girl in the pool, her wrists tied with that red cord? If Bolster had not brought it to me, I must have confessed that I was in the wood that day—I must have confessed that I had lost it near the Lady's Bower; and all that I had heard and seen would have been torn from my nauseling lips. So I burnt the cord, and heaped another proof against myself in Sir Hilton's soul. I did this, because I would not be a witness against his brother; yet that he should deem me guilty, cost me tears that seemed a rain of fire on my cheeks.

"Charles Vigo had guessed the truth I saw it in his eyes when I thanked him for the cord. 'You like it near the pool; the knot slipped as you drew the cord through your hands in anger,' he said, as he looked me in the face. I grew white to the lips, but answered faintly, 'Yes.'"

"'You will not ask me any questions?' I cried, as I grasped his arm."

"'Not one,' he answered. 'I respect your motive, though I lament your silence. Olive, duty should be stronger than love.'"

"'Let me alone,' I said. 'Let me die for them if I will.'"

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—As winter advances and the weather becomes more and more inclement and trying, the earliest evidences of ill-health must be immediately checked and removed, or a slight illness may result in a serious malady. Hoarseness and sore throat, quinsey, influenza, chronic cough, bronchitis, and most other pulmonary affections will be relieved by rubbing this soothing Ointment into the skin as nearly as practicable to the seat of mischief. This treatment, simple yet effective, is admirably adapted for the removal of those diseases during infancy and youth. Old asthmatic invalids will derive marvellous relief from the use of Holloway's remedies, which have wonderfully relieved many such sufferers, and re-established health after every other means had signally failed.

WARDEN JOHNSTON.

William Johnston, reeve of Amaranth, was elected warden of Dufferin on Tuesday afternoon by the unanimous vote of the county council. THE SUN supported Mr. Johnston on several different occasions when he aspired to municipal honors in Amaranth, and, therefore, we are pleased to see him elevated to the still higher office of warden, which is the most honorable position in the county. The appointment, we are sure, will meet with the hearty approval of Dufferinites.

DUFFERIN'S POOR.

In our last issue we made reference to the poor within our borders and of the crying necessity for the speedy erection of a house of refuge in the county, and we are happy to say that our remarks have borne good fruit. From every municipality in the riding, especially from the banner township of Mono, have parties called upon THE SUN and expressed their warmest thanks for the information conveyed in the article. We are cheered to know that the past apathy of the people was not the result of culpable indifference on their part, but wholly for want of the knowledge which THE SUN for the first time conveyed to its many readers. And we feel that once the people know and begin to think they will not rest contented until the county council makes provision for the poor amongst us. Already we hear of action being taken. We are glad to learn that our energetic and humane townsman, J. A. Aikin, has taken the matter up and is circulating a petition to present to the county council praying that immediate action be taken to provide a house of refuge for the poor of the county. The time at the disposal of Mr. Aikin will not enable him to cover the whole ground, but he will be able to do sufficient to show that there is an almost unanimous desire on the part of the taxpayers that further delay will not be pleasing to them. We understand it is the intention of Mr. Aikin to present the petition to the council on the first favorable opportunity, and we earnestly hope to see him well supported by the clergy and benevolent of the town and county, and that the matter will be pressed home as the urgency of the case demands.

In its last issue the Shelburne Economist copied our editorial and pressed our arguments with credit both to the ability and humanity of the editor; but at the same time some of our northern friends seemed to infer that we had in view as an ulterior object the benefit which would inure to this town by the maintenance of a house of refuge in its immediate vicinity. And the Economist also reproaches us mildly with arrogating to ourselves the credit of having first discovered that there were any poor in our midst, and that it was the duty of the more fortunate brother to assist a less fortunate brother when calamity overtakes him in his winding journey through life. We take no such position, we make no such claim, the poor have been with us always their care has been a charge upon Christians and the Christian churches for all ages. Even in the early history of the Jewish nation the care of the poor was by command, particularly enjoined upon the people. The doctrine of the relief of the poor is not modern; it did not originate with THE SUN. We have an indistinct recollection of having somewhere read that "When thou cuttest down thy harvest in the field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go again to fetch it: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow: that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the work of thy hands." Thus it was in ancient times both a law and a duty and doubly so should it be in the present age when so much of the misery of the world goes from intemperance and other evils which are the direct result of what may be justly called the criminal legislation of the country, and for which every voter is more or less directly responsible. THE SUN do a not enter into details—it seeks only to lay the hard and cruel facts before its readers and to urge upon the proper authorities proper action, and instead of seeking to lead we are content to follow the redoubtable John Parks, Reeves Jelly, McGhee and others to whom the Economist refers to as leaders in the good cause. We do not write for sensation or notoriety—THE SUN'S subscription list is not kept up by such methods. We are willing to serve as an "armor bearer." If good may result we are content to follow the Economist as a jolly boat in the wake of a British man-of-war. We may be hidden in the spray but when the good work shall have been completed THE SUN will clear away the mist and rejoice with all those who have in any way contributed to bring about a result which should be the common purpose of all well wishers of the county and the cause of humanity.

COUNTY COUNCIL!

A Good Start Made for the "Royal" Transaction of Business.

PETITIONING FOR A POORHOUSE!

Reeve Johnston of Amaranth Elected Warden.

John Park the Editor of the Sun—There are Six new Members at the Year's Board.

The members of the Dufferin county council for 1892 are holding their first session this year in the court house. Before 2 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon the councillors were presenting their certificates to the clerk, and all were found correct with the exception of Orangeville's deputy reeve, Mr. M. Green. The town clerk neglected to state that there were over five hundred voters in Orangeville, but nevertheless Mr. Green took his seat with the approval of the other members. There are seventeen members and when the roll was called these gentlemen responded: H. Endacott, M. Green, Orangeville; W. Jelly, Shelburne; Jas. Snell, W. Dynes, D. Still, Mono; W. Johnston, E. Hamilton, Amaranth; J. H. Simpson, J. Turner, East Garafraxa; J. Park, W. McClelland, East Luther; R. Gallaugher, G. Henderson, Mulmur; R. McGhee, S. McDowell, W. F. Gowan, Melancthon.

ELECTING A WARDEN.

After the roll-call the first thing to be done was to elect a warden. Mr. Park seconded by Mr. Jelly, moved that W. Johnston be warden. No other nominations were made and Mr. Johnston was escorted amid applause to the dais by his mover and seconder. Judge McCarthy was absent through sickness and County Clerk Reid had to perform the task of administering the oath. Mr. Johnston took the oath after which he delivered a very creditable speech, thanking the council for the honor they conferred upon him and expressing the wish that everything would run smooth in the council this year. He would have something more to say before the council adjourned.

The minutes of the last meeting were taken as read and adopted.

PARK IS IN IT.

Mr. Dynes made a motion that a committee be appointed to strike the standing committees, but to this Mr. Park objected, and wanted the council to appoint the committees and moved an amendment to that effect. A most ludicrous scene followed. Several members expressed their opinion on the subject, and Mr. Park would reply to each in a ten or twenty minutes' speech. Finally the amendment was voted on and had not a single supporter.

The warden appointed C. Braiden as his auditor and the council had quite a time in deciding between R. L. Mortimer and Jno. McLaine. The latter got it by a close call.

Mr. Park moved that the warden be paid the sum of $3 per day and mileage for every day's work done out side of attendance upon the county council and that the $100 grant in November be discontinued. Mr. Park was almost alone in the attempt to do away with the "soft bun feed" as he called it, but Messrs. Jelly, Gallaugher and others spoke against it and it was referred to the Finance committee.

A number of accounts, etc., which had been forgotten in the early part of the afternoon, were referred to their respective committees.

PETITIONING FOR A POORHOUSE.

A largely signed petition was read asking that the council take some steps in regard to establishing a poorhouse in the county. The signatures of the clergy and leading ratepayers of the town were attached to the petition. The petition was referred to the Finance committee.

Mr. Park moved a resolution to the effect that a candidate at any municipal election should deposit $10 with the clerk, and if he did not poll 20 per cent of the vote cast the $10 should be forfeited.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

The special committee appointed to choose the standing committees reported as follows:

FINANCE—McGhee, Snell, Endacott, Jelly, Gallaugher, Simpson, Park.

ASSESSMENT.—Jelly, Snell, McGhee, Simpson, Endacott, Park, Hamilton, Gallaugher.

EDUCATION—Dynes, Hamilton, Henderson, Green, Still, Turner, Gowan.

ROAD & BRIDGE.—Jelly, McDowell, McClelland, Henderson, Dynes, Green, Simpson.

COUNTY PROPERTY.—Endacott, Turner, Snell, McGhee, Gowan, Gallaugher, McDowell.

PRINTING.—Dynes, Green, Gowan, Still, Henderson, McClelland, Turner.

The council then adjourned till Wednesday morning.

The remainder of the report will appear in THE SUN of next week.

RELESSEY.

REMOVED.—One of the oldest residents of Mono township, Mr. M. McCabe has removed to Arthur to spend the remainder of his days. His wife died a few years ago. Miss McCabe, his daughter, will keep house for him. Your correspondent hopes that the evening of Mr. McCabe's life may be a happy and peaceful one.

LITTLE LOCALS.—A number of our young folks took in the Emma Wells Comedy Company at your town last week..... The new council met on Monday last week and a large number of ratepayers were present.

CALLED HOME.—We are very sorry that we are called upon to announce the death of Mrs. McCabe, which sad event took place on Friday, the 8th inst. Mrs McCabe was respected by the whole community, and her many friends regret that she has been called to her long home.

ALD. GOV THEIR.—Mr. Alf. Glover has been reappointed assessor for the banner township, and another champion of washing the widows is in option. Alf., look out or the maidens will have your scalp.

PUTTING ON AIRS.—Mr. Hugh Maguire has been putting on great airs lately when flying along the road at a 2.40 pace with his elegant new bob sleighs.

CALEDON.

WANT OF LEFT BEHIND.—Mr. Daniel Laughlin of Caledon township is applying for letters of administration to the estate of his deceased brother, William, who died Oct. 21st, 1891. Personality of estate $221; realty $3,700; W. L. Walsh, solicitor, Orangeville.

The great popularity of Ayer's Pills as a cathartic is due no less to their promptness and efficacy than to their coating of sugar and removal from any injurious effects. Children take them readily. Ben Ayer's Almanac for this year, just out.

AN IMPRESSIVE DEPUTATION

WAIT ON THE COUNTY COUNCIL AND REQUEST THEM TO TAKE IN HAND TO BUILD A HOUSE OF REFUGE.

A deputation consisting of Rev. A. Henderson, Police Magistrate Pettelle, Dr. H. B. Fraser and Mr. J. A. Aikin waited upon the county council yesterday afternoon and urged the advisability of erecting a house of refuge in this county. The petition which was presented the previous day and which was referred to the Finance committee, was reported on, and advised that the clerk correspondence with the county of Peel and ascertain their views on the advisability of building a joint poor-house. A special committee consisting of Messrs. Endacott, McGhee and Park were appointed to review all correspondence and report at the June session. Thus one point is gained in this much needed reform.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BOARD.

The Trustees Rest and Reorganize for 1892.

The members of the public school board met for organization in the council chamber at 1 o'clock on Wednesday of last week, the following gentlemen being present: Messrs. B. Savage, J. Perdue, J. S. Leighton, J. M. Bennett, J. E. Booth, Geo. Wilcox and Wm. Fleming. The first business was electing a chairman and appointing a secretary. Messrs Savage and Leighton being re-elected to the positions by the unanimous voice of the board. The standing committees for the year were chosen with the following result, the first named gentleman being chairman in each case:

FINANCE—Leighton, Bennett, Wilcox.

PROPERTY.—Booth, Perdue, Fleming.

VISITING.—Bennett, Wilcox, Dodds.

Several answers were received in reply to the board's request for tenders for supplying 60 cords of green maple wood to the school, and D. Trimble was awarded the contract at $3.25 per cord.

After a little debate it was decided to hold meetings of the board in future in the council chamber at 8 o'clock, p. m., the first Tuesday in each month.

The board is composed of all last year's members with one exception, Mr. J. E. Booth of the East ward being the new man.

It is THE SUN'S wish that the public school board of 1892 will do nothing to shake the confidence that the ratepayers placed in the trustees of '91.

ATHLONE.

Mrs. Margaret McNamara has, we understand, subscribed $500 towards the rebuilding of Achill church, lately destroyed by fire. The new church will not be erected on the old site, but will be built at Devines corners about three lots north of the present property.

Tuesday morning of last week at an early hour the handsome Roman Catholic church at Achill, in the township of Adjala, was totally destroyed by fire. This commodious edifice occupied a commanding position a few miles west of Tottenham, and was erected in 1870 on plans furnished by Rev. Dean Harris, then pastor of Adjala, shortly after his return from Rome. Unfortunately the insurance was small.

MARSVILLE.

GOOD STOCK.—Joseph Cobbledick of this place has purchased a ram lamb and 5 Shropshire ewes from W. B. Cockburn of Aberfoyle, Scotland. This has always been a great place for superior stock.

POOR HEALTH.—We are sorry to inform THE SUN'S many readers that our genial township clerk, Mr. John Preston, is not enjoying the best of health, but we hope he will be all right again before long.

LAND PURCHASER.—Mr. Thos. Conlin, of 10th con. of East Garafraxa, has bought the 50 acres opposite his premises from Mr. John Wood, the price being $3,300. There are no buildings of value on the property.

GRIM REAPER.—The grim reaper with his sharp scythe visited the home of Mr. Wm Johnston, 13th con., on Wednesday the 18th and took from him als beloved mother. Deceased who was the relict of the late Jas. Johnston, was well-known and highly respected throughout the township, and her many friends deeply regret her death. Mrs Johnston had reached the ripe age of 87 yrs.

HOCKLEY.

AT ST. JAMES.—Rev. Canon Murphy of the parish of Innisfil held services in St. James church here on Sunday. His discourse was listened to attentively and much good should be the result.

WILL BILLY DO IT?—Billy Parker of Sheldon had a bee on Saturday drawing brick from Orangeville, and it is his intention to erect a new residence next summer. It is a well known fact that Billy is a gay bachelor and the question naturally arises: "Is Billy going to do it?"

SUDDEN DEATH.—It is your correspondent's sad duty to chronicle the very sudden death of Mrs. James Quinn, which occured at her residence on Sunday the 10th. Mrs. Quinn had been in attendance on her friend, Mrs. McCabe, who succumbed to the grim angel two days before. Her end was sudden, but in the midst of life we are in death. The bereaved family have the sympathy of all.

SCALDED TO DEATH.—Several days ago the 2-year-old son of Mr. Samuel Montgomery fell into a tub of hot water and was so badly scalded that the little fellow died three days afterwards. His elder sister, a girl 5 years of age, was playing and the poor little boy fell backwards into the tub. The remains were interred in St. John's church cemetery, Mono, on Monday, the 18th.

JACK COLE KICKED.—Jack Cole, the world-renowned well digger, met with a bad accident at Allaston a short time ago. He drove up there with a pump and when he was in the yard of Booth's hotel a horse kicked him in the side and broke several of his ribs. He was brought home and his injuries were attended to, and he is now on the highway to recovery.

ANOTHER ACCIDENT.—A week ago Friday a serious and perhaps fatal accident occurred at the residence of James Anderson. His little daughter, Evelyn, aged 9 years, was watching her brother watering the horses when the thoughtless boy picked little Evelyn up and set her on one of the animals. The horse commenced to run for the stable and the girl fell to the ground, receiving a wicked kick on the head from the vicious animal. A doctor was called in and attended to the little sufferer's injuries and at last accounts she was progressing as rapidly as could be expected. It is a wonder the little thing was not instantly killed.

Biliousness - Fever and Ague.

So plausibly do Dr Morse's Indian Root Pills search out and drive away the seeds of disease that all persons living in a country where fever and ague, and all other bilious diseases are prevalent, will find they should never be without them. From two to four pills each night upon going to bed, will, in a short time, drive away the sickly yellow look of bilious persons, and bring to their cheeks a beautiful glow of perfect health. Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine.

The Grand Duke Constantine, an uncle of the Czar, is dead. He was born in 1827.

SIX YEARS' EXPERIENCE.

DEAR SIRS,—I was troubled for 6 years with erysipelas, and two bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters entirely cured me. I keep B.B.B. constantly in the house and think it an effectual cure for all diseases caused by bad blood.

Harrison Drops Out in the East and the Best Goes to Bell—The Evening Session.

All the councillors-elect of the new council, except Mr. James Morrison of the West ward, were present in the council chamber at 11 o'clock on Monday morning, the 18th, for the purpose of taking the oaths of qualification and of office. Mr. Morrison headed the poll in the East, but he discovered that he was not sufficiently educated, and, therefore, he retreated from taking the oath of qualification. E. Bell, the unsuccessful candidate, was on hand in the evening and dropped into the shoes that should have been worn by Mr. Morrison.

The following is the council for 1892:

Mayor—Johnston Lindsay.

Reeve—Henry Endacott.

Deputy-Reeve—Marshall Green.

Councillors—North ward, Wm. Still, Wm. Mesary; South ward, James Brown, W. J. Gordon; East ward, R. F. West, E. Bell; West ward, Jos. Riddell, Robt. Mann.

After the preliminary business was completed the members took their seats and Mayor Lindsay ascended the throne.

HIS WORSHIP'S ADDRESS.

Mayor Lindsay followed the practice that has been in vogue for some time by reading an address, of which the following is a report:

"I take the liberty of calling your attention to some matters which, in my opinion, require your consideration. First, as to the unsatisfactory manner in which the taxes are now collected, not at all in keeping with the spirit of the by law regulating the same. I think the usefulness of one collector for the whole town is past. It seems too heavy an undertaking for the class of applicants that aspire to the position. I would suggest the appointment of a collector for each ward. The collection could then be done promptly and within the time prescribed in the by law. I think it would be advisable for the council to consider the advisability of putting a cost of broken field stone on Mill street; gravel is too soft a material for the heavy traffic of that street. If such a course was adopted I think it would make a substantial roadway. An amendment to the by law appointing and regulating the duties of a foreman on the streets is required, by adding thereto a clause as follows: 'That all pay sheets for work done upon the street or walks under the supervision of the foreman should have his declaration upon oath, certifying to the correctness of the same, attached thereto; that all purchases made by him be approved of by the Road & Bridge committee before such purchases are made; that the said foreman have all work performed in the manner and at the time as instructed by said committee.' A large number of ratepayers have for some time past been advocating a better system of water works for the town, whereby pure water would be obtained for household purposes. I think it would be in order for the council to appoint a special committee to make inquiries regarding the manner the same might be obtained, with probable cost, and report to the council. I am of the opinion the town should have a solicitor and recommend the council to appoint a suitable man to the position."

After the mayor's message was read Reeve Endacott moved that a committee consisting of Messrs. Green, Still, Mann, West, Gordon and the mover be appointed to strike the standing committees for the year and report at 7:30 o'clock in the evening.

THE EVENING SESSION.

At half-past 7 every local legislator was in his place. Several accounts were trotted out and when somebody moved that they be referred to a committee with power to pay, the mayor spoke strongly against such proceedings, as did several of the councillors. He thought it was a loose way of doing business and should be discontinued. The bills, along with a number of snow-shovelling accounts, were referred.

WANTS THE JOB.

County Constable J. J. Hubbard sent in an application for the office of chief-of-police, offering to do the job for $150 per year and the pickings arising therefrom, or $300 per annum and a uniform and let the town keep the fees. The communication was left over until the next meeting.

John Graham, who lost considerable in the great flood nearly two years ago, asked for a rebate of taxes. The Assessment committee will undoubtedly recommend a refund.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Reeve Endacott presented the report of the special committee appointed in the morning to choose the standing committees for the year. Here they are, with the first named gentleman chairman in each case:

FINANCE—Endacott, Green, Still.

ASSESSMENT—Green, Mann, West.

TOWN PROPERTY—Still, Endacott, Brown.

FIRE & WATER—Mann, Endacott, Still.

PRINTING—Riddell, Mesary, Bell.

ROAD & BRIDGE—Gordon, West, Mesary, Riddell, Green.

STREET LIGHTING—Mesary, Green, Brown.

CHARITY—Brown, Bell, Mann.

CEMETERY—West, Gordon, Riddell.

The report was adopted without comment.

The following by-laws were introduced and received two readings: Mr. Endacott—to appoint two auditors, Mr. Green—to appoint general officers; Mr. Still—to appoint a general health officer; Mr. Green—to appoint a high school trustee; Mr. Still—to appoint a local board of health; Mr. Green—to grant the High school Literary society free use of the town hall for one night. The last mentioned by law received its third reading later on in the evening, as did also that appointing auditors. W. R. Kent was the mayor's choice and J. M. Bennett the council's and their remuneration was fixed at $17.50 each.

After wrestling with a little unimportant business the new fathers adjourned.

Mr. McClenkey moved, seconded by Mr. Sill, that W. E. Reid be appointed collector of rates for the west part of the township at a salary of $57.

Mr. John Herbert made application to be appointed treasurer of the township, but no action was taken. The Reeve appointed William Glover for one of the auditors of township accounts and on motion of Mr. Sill, seconded by Mr. McClenkey, Mr. Geo. H. Harshaw was appointed for the other auditor.

Mr. Dynes moved, seconded by Mr. Sill, that deputy returning officers and polling booths be paid the same as last year. On motion of Mr. Sill, seconded by Mr. Dynes, the sum of $10 was granted towards the support of Mrs. Grierby who is in indigent circumstances.

Mr. Sill moved, seconded by Mr. Dynes, that the sum of $10 be granted to Samuel Thompson and that Cemetery Committee spend the same for his benefit.

Mr. McNabb moved, seconded by Mr. McClenkey, that the sum of $2 be paid to John Cragg for gravel hauled on the west town line.

For the purpose of taking charge of the several roads of the township, the following divisions were made: David Sill the south east quarter, Wm. McNabb the north east quarter, Wm. McClenkey the south west quarter, Wm. Dynes the north west quarter, and the lines to have charge of the boundary lines. The reeve and clerk were appointed a committee on printing. The council then adjourned to meet on the first Friday in March, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m.

Calloden Callings.

GENTLEMEN,—In 1888 I was severely afflicted with gravel of the kidneys from which I suffered great pain. I was recommended to take Burdock Blood Bitters, which I did, feeling great relief, and after taking 4 bottles can truly say I am cured and have not since been troubled. I highly recommend it.

A very successful carnival was given on the Mill street skating rink on Friday week. Bruning Bros. know how to run the shows.

Archeboy Langevin, of Leontopolis, Que., died Tuesday after 12 hours' illness in the 71st year. He was a brother of Sir Hector Langevin.

The many friends of Mr. A. Wilcox, one of the pioneer residents of this town, will be glad to learn that he is gradually recovering from his late serious illness.

Several of our correspondents have not been showing up lately. Hustle in the news, gentlemen, and keep THE SUN in the first rank of country journalism.

That genial hawker of glasses, Alex. Rutherford, is again in charge of the Elgin house bar and it seems like old times to see his smiling face once more.

Mr. M. Wilkins, who arrived in Orangeville from Manitoba a couple of weeks ago, has made ten trips to this town since removing to the prairie province.

The young ladies and gentlemen of the town have commenced holding "bread and butter" assemblies. The first took place two weeks ago in the new Campbell block.

Little 9-year-old Evelyn Anderson, daughter of Mr. James Anderson of Hockley, was kicked on the head by a horse several days ago and narrowly escaped being killed.

The Erin Advocate has arisen from the dead and looks bigger and stronger than ever before. The new paper is a newsy, neatly got up 4-page journal. Success, Bro. Hull, is THE SUN's worst wish.

A curling match will take place on the Home rink this evening between the junior and senior members of the Orangeville curling club with Deputy-reeve Green and R. Robinson as skips for the former and D. B. Brown and Geo. Monkman for the latter. A handsome silver medal will be awarded to the side winning in three consecutive matches.

Last week Jimmy Hunter looked on the wine when it was red and became altogether too exhilarious. Chief Shields was kind enough to accompany him to the "calaboose," and a day's confinement therein enabled Jimmy to gain his equilibrium.

Some merchants of this town still patronize city printing shops instead of turning their work into the local printing offices. Wouldn't it be a great way to build up the town if the Orangeville printers bought all their goods at Toronto stores!

It is something more than amusing to watch the two uptown scandal mongers calling each other vile names and bidding for society printing. THE SUN shines once a week for $1 per year, and is overflowing with local and general news. The people know this and that's why our subscription list is on the rise.

MARRIED—Mr. V. P. Hunt of the conservatory of music, Toronto, son of Rev. J. Hunt, formerly pastor of the Methodist church here, was married on Wednesday, Dec. 31, to Miss Nellie Robinson of Omagh, Halton county.

ALEX. SMITH DEAD.—Alex. Smith, the young school-teacher who had his leg mangled by a C. P. R. train at Caledon station on Christmas eve, died from his injuries at Burrell's hotel, Charleston, at 5 o'clock on Wednesday morning of last week. The remains were taken to Ripley, his native place, for interment.

A DISTINGUISHED READER.—Miss Jessie Alexander, the distinguished reader of Toronto, will give a recital in the town hall to-morrow (Friday) evening in aid of the High School Literary Society. This talented lady has visited Orangeville on several different occasions and, therefore, needs no recommendation from THE SUN. The hall should be crowded to the doors.

ST. MARK'S ANNIVERSARY.—The teachers and scholars of St. Mark's Sunday school will give their annual entertainment in the town hall on Tuesday next, Feb 2nd. There will be no tea in connection with the entertainment this year, but a superior program will be presented. A large crowd will undoubtedly attend. Doors open at 7, performances commences at 8 o'clock.

SPRAINED HER ANKLE.—A rather peculiar accident befel Miss Birdie Hughes in Hughes Bro's tailor shop shortly after 8 o'clock on Saturday evening. Miss Hughes was getting up from a sewing machine, when she made a misstep and sprained her ankle. Dr. Fraser was summoned and attended to her injuries, and the young lady was conveyed to her home in the South ward.

DEATH OF MRS KITCHEN.—One of the oldest residents of Orangeville crossed the great divide, on Monday the 18th in the person of Mrs. Robt. Kitchen, mother of Mr. James Watson. Death resulted from an attack of la grippe. The deceased was 77 years old and has resided here for half a century. The remains were interred in the Forest Lawn cemetery on Thursday.

CREDIT SALE.—On Thursday, Feb. 4, Auctioneer Jas A. Patterson will sell by public auction on the farm of Mr Geo. Moffatt, lot 14, con. 5, east, Mono, the farm stock, implements, etc., belonging to that gentleman, who recently purchased the stage line between Rosemont and Shelburne and is retiring from farming. The sale commences at 1 o'clock sharp, and every thing will be sold without reserve.

LA GRIPPE'S VICTIM.—Mr. George Siggins of John street succumbed to the effects of la grippe on Friday, the 16th. Deceased had not been enjoying the best of health for some time, but he was attacked with la grippe, which undoubtedly hastened his death. A brother of Mr. Siggins resides at London, but he was too ill to attend the funeral which took place to the Forest Lawn cemetery the following Sunday.

WERE CHARITABLY DISPOSED.—Two Sisters from the Sunnyside Orphanage, Toronto, paid their annual visit to Orangeville last week and were well received by the charitably disposed people of the town. The Sisters collected $70 in cash and several dollars worth of goods. When worthy charity presents itself Orangevillians are always willing to contribute irrespective of creed, party or anything else. How many towns are there in Canada that do this?

SICK AT DENVER.—Mrs. W. F. Robinson (nee Maggie McKim) daughter of Sheriff McKim of Guelph, is lying dangerously ill at Denver, Col., and the gravest results are feared. Mrs. Robinson, it will be remembered, occupied a position in the registry office here previous to her marriage to Mr. W. F. Robinson, formerly of the Orangeville high school teaching staff about two years ago, her brother, Mr. Wm. McKim, being registrar for Dufferin.

A NEW SCHOOL BUILDING.—The trustees of the new school section at Cardwell, Mono township, are asking for tenders for the erection of a building, on the accepted site, lot 11, con. 1, west. The tenders will be received by Wm Jackson at Cardwell, P. O., up till noon on Wednesday, 3rd of February. Plans and specifications can be seen at Stewart, Hewat & Co's store. The other trustees are Messrs. Wm. McCluskey and Hugh Bracken.

CUT HIS FOOT.—Mr. Joseph Reid of East Garafraxa is laid up at present and it is thought he'll do no more work for several weeks. Since Joseph turned over a new leaf a couple of months ago he has been working hard to make up for lost time, but misfortune seems to pursue him still. Several days ago he was chopping wood in the bush and the axe glanced off a tree and cut one of his feet in a severe manner. He will be laid up for three or four weeks.

H. S. LITERARY.—The Orangeville High School Literary Society has reorganized with the following officers in charge: A. Steele, B. A., president; Miss Moir, vice president; Miss F. Collier, secretary;—Murch treasurer; W. F. Seymour, leader of glee club; Em Foley, Annie Clingan, Emma Skelton, D. Atkinson, W. J. Killeen, councillors; reporters, Em Foley for THE SUN, W. J. Killeen for the Post, H. Crozier for the Advertiser. Another meeting was held on Thursday when a resolution of condolence was forwarded to Mr. R. F. Parker, whose estimable young wife died a short time ago. A new departure has been made by the opening of a question drawer. Questions were answered by Miss Clingan and A. McKitrick, and a great deal of amusement resulted.

A LUCKY THROW.—Several evenings ago that well known trotting stallion, Dynamite, was raffled for at Neil's livery stable and was captured by the genial P. S. trustee for the South ward, Mr. J. Perdue. A large number of tickets was disposed of, but many ticket holders did not put in an appearance. Mr. Phil Smith, the pushing manager of the G. P. R. restaurant, threw for those who were absent, with the result mentioned above. Everything was conducted fairly and squarely and there was no kicking.

NEVER THE SAME AGAIN.—Robert Greenshields died of heart disease at his home on Gwynne avenue on Saturday morning. He will be remembered as the driver on the C. P. R. train which killed the three persons at the Broadway avenue crossing a couple of years ago. Greenshields received a severe shock to his nervous system at the time and was never again the same man.—Empire. The above engineer used to run on the Orangeville branch of the old C. V. R., and was favorably known in town.

DISSOLVING PARTNERSHIP.—Wright Bros., the enterprising butchers who occupy the eastern stalls in the market, will dissolve partnership on Monday next. This firm has been doing business in Orangeville for about 15 years and met with the greatest of success. Mr. Thos. Wright will continue the business and the retiring partner, Mr. John Wright, will turn his two farms on Purple hill into stock farms and raise cattle on an extensive scale. We wish both of them every success.

A GOOD COMEDY CO.—The Emma Wells Concert & Comedy Co. completed a six nights' engagement at the town hall on Saturday evening, and large crowds turned out each night to witness the performance. Marks, the comique, is funnier than ever and Misses Emma Wells and Jennie Ray are, if anything, improved since their last visit to Orangeville. The other members of the company are up to the standard and the whole make a strong combination. The Citizens' band, under whose auspices they played, made a snug sum out of the engagement.

OLD FRIENDS.—It is a great source of pleasure for us to see many of the first readers of THE SUN make their way to the office for the purpose of renewing their subscription to this journal. The veterans can spin many interesting yarns about THE SUN, which was the first paper published around here. Among those who renewed last week were: Thos. Knight, Sam. Corbit, Orangeville, Jno. Tweedy, Grand Valley, Thos. Wallace, Honeywood, all of whom have been subscribers for thirty two years, and Wm. Dale, East Garafraxa, who has been taking THE SUN for over a quarter of a century.

THE OBSERVER.—We have received two numbers of the above paper, a new weekly venture hailing from the Queen city of the Dominion. On seeing the strange face our first impulse was to declare that Toronto was overstocked with newspapers and that there was not standing room for more; but on perusal of the Observer we find that it is different from all other papers in style, vigor and get-up, and with the additional attraction as correspondent or editress of one of its departments our old friend, the accomplished, versatile, entertaining and very original "Marie Stuart." Our best wishes go out to "Marie Stuart" and the Observer.

DEATH OF MRS. MCKIM.—Mrs McKim, wife of Robt. McKim, sheriff of Wellington, died at Guelph on Thursday, the 14th of January, at the age of 64. She has been suffering from cancer lately, and had not the vitality left to recover from an operation performed in the fall. Mrs McKim was widely known throughout Peel, and her hospitality and generosity was proverbial. She leaves eight of a family:—William, registrar of Dufferin, Orangeville; R. A., Detroit, and James, at Denver, Col.; Mrs A. C. Neff, Toronto; Mrs. W. F. Robinson, Denver, and three daughters at home. Her brother Rev. Wm. Shannon, resides at Orangeville. All of those and especially her husband, will have much sympathy in their loss.

DIED AT DETROIT.—With deep regret we record the death of Mr. Charles Lorroe, which occurred at Detroit, Mich., on Friday last. Deceased was ill but a few days and the fact that his wife, who is visiting her parents in Amaranth, did not hear of his illness until the message arrived announcing his death, makes the bereavement a very sad one. He was married between two and three years ago to Miss Golden, the estimable daughter of Mr. John Golden of Amaranth. The remains were brought to Amaranth and the funeral took place on Sunday. A large number of friends accompanied the remains to their last resting place. The bereaved ones have THE SUN'S warmest sympathy.

A CURE FOR THE GRIP.—A gentleman of Louisville city, in a letter to Dr. Keeley of Dwight, Ill., stated that he had been suffering for several weeks with the grip. In his reply Dr. Keeley says. I would like to suggest a treatment for grip which I know is nearly specific as well as innocent. It is simply assafetida, given in four grain pills, one pill four times a day. No man need be sick of the grip these days who will take it. For the past two years, with all the patients here subject, of course, to such epidemic, I have had not one man go to bed from the disease. I break it up very quickly, and in fact cure it. If this treatment was generally known it would save sufferers much expense and wretchedness and many useful and valuable lives.

ANOTHER UNFORTUNATE DEAD.—Two weeks ago THE SUN published a list of the unfortunate paupers who shuffled off this mortal coil in Dufferin's great "combination," and about 5 o'clock on Monday morning another of God's poor crossed to the other shore from that institution. Mrs. Scott, a poor old woman over 80 years of age, was transferred from Mono some time ago to don the criminal's garb and occupy a cell in the "castle" just because poverty was her only crime. The poor creature was partially insane when she arrived, but latterly she grew worse and for some weeks before welcome death released her she had to be locked in a cell all the time. It is said she has wealthy relatives in Mono and Caledon, but she is too often the case they refused to support her. The remains were interred in the Town cemetery the same afternoon, and as the procession, which consisted of the hearse, moved along strange voices seemed to murmur the old sad refrain:

Battle her bones over the stones,
She's a pauper whom nobody owns!

JOINED THE CHORUS.—Mademe Kennefick, an aged dame who has served a living for the past several years in the vicinity of the C. P. R. station by washing and scrubbing, was conveyed up to the "castle" on Wednesday of last week and will be a guest for the next three months.....P. E. Petrolle and James Beggins up to the "combination" last week for 110 days on a charge of vagrancy. The poor fellow has been living with relatives in Mono for some months, but as time went by he was stricken with paralysis and expressed the wish to go to jail. We need a more suitable place for our unfortunates.

AN INCIPIENT BLAZE.—About 6 o'clock Friday afternoon our much-abused fire alarm pealed forth its warning of danger and a couple of minutes afterwards two hose reels were dashing down Broadway and Mill street to the fire, which was located in Mr. J. H. Hughes' residence on the corner of Church and Wellington streets. The nearest hydrant is in front of Moore's marble works, Mill street, and a branch was attached to it, but when all the hose was laid the firemen were about 30 yards from the building. A number of willing workers, however, extinguished the blaze before the firemen got there, and their services were not required. The fire originated from a defective chimney, and if it had not been discovered at the time the building would undoubtedly have been destroyed. The loss, which will amount to about $200, is covered by insurance.

A POPULAR OFFICIAL.—On Friday evening, the 15th, a number of the friends of Mr. E. S. Ambrose, late accountant at the Bank of Hamilton here, assembled in the Queen's hotel parlor and presented Mr. A. with a purse containing $50 and an address. Crown Attorney Myers occupied the chair and Mayor Lindsey read the address, which was signed by a number of our foremost citizens, and made the presentation. Mr. Ambrose replied in suitable terms after which speeches were made by Manager Watson, B. Swinton, J. O. Mowat of the Bank of Hamilton, W. Hewat, D. McCarthy, W. Johnston, B. McGuire, and others. Songs were sung by MacMillan, Piercy and Armstrong. Mr. A. left for Hamilton the following evening, whither he has been promoted.

I. O. O. F. OFFICERS INSTALLED.—At a recent meeting of Maple Leaf lodge No. 57, I. O. O. F., the following officials were installed by Bro. D. McMorris, D. D. G. M., of Erin, assisted by Bros. Wm. Fleming, Jos. Riddell, D. B. Grown and H. Gillespie: Robt. Hughes, N. G.; F. R. Parker, V. G.; W. G. Bowland, R. S. N. G.; Wm. Bradley, R. S. V. G.; Jno. Cobean, P. S.; Rich. Mortimer, T.; Jno. Brown, W.; H. Gillespie, C.; G. Kyle, O. G.; D. B. Brown, R. S. N. G.; Wm. Fleming, L. S. N. G.; J. B. Hughes, P. S. V. G.; Robt. Clarke, L. S. V. G.; F. J. Bradley, R. S. S.; A. H. Turnbull, L. S. S. This lodge is one of the most prosperous societies in town and has a membership of 60, which will undoubtedly be increased before long. The lodge pays $3 per week sick benefits and has a reserve fund of $1500.

DEATH'S HARVEST.—Death has been steadily at work in this section of the country as well as anywhere else, and one by one the old residents of this town are falling victims to his sickle. On Sunday of last week Mr. William Reid, who resided near the C. P. R. station, was called away, and he quietly and peacefully obeyed the grim messenger's summons. Deceased was a straightforward, honest man and made many friends during his long residence in Mono, from where he removed to town several years ago. Although Mr. Reid had passed his 67th mile stone he had been enjoying excellent health up to a week before his death. A widow and a grown up family of one son and three daughters survive him, and they have the entire sympathy of the community in their sad bereavement. The remains were laid in their last resting place in the Forest Lawn cemetery on Monday, the funeral being largely attended.

"Like Magic,"

THE effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Colds, Coughs, Croup, and Sore Throat are, in most cases, immediately relieved by the use of this wonderful remedy. It strengthens the vocal organs, allays irritation, and prevents the inroads of Consumption; in every stage of that dread disease, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. U. Cozley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, it being more salable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great success was considered marvelous."—R. S. Drake, M. D., Beloit, Kans.

"My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skillful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine; saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers."—C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

ENDACOTT BROS.

Squire Henry of Mono Centre has been township clerk of Mono for 40 years and treasurer for 20 years.

La grippe, successor to "McGinty," "Annie Rooney" et al, is doing a rushing business in this locality.

A regular old fashioned blizzard struck this town on Monday evening and held high carnival for several hours.

[illegible] Dr. Smith, Orangeville, has [illegible]

[illegible] brought to Orangeville on a recent ticket day.

A very successful carnival was given on the Mono street skating rink on Friday evening. Bruning Bros. know how run the skates.

Archbishop Langevin, of Leontopolis, Que., died Tuesday after 12 hours' illness in his 71st year. He was a brother of Sir Hector Langevin.

The many friends of Mr. A. Wilcox, one of the pioneer residents of this town, will be glad to learn that he is gradually recovering from his late serious illness.

Several of our correspondents have not been showing up lately. Hustle in the news, gentlemen, and keep THE SUN in the first rank of country journalism.

That genial handler of glasses, Alex. Rutherford, is again in charge of the Rigby house bar and it seems like old times to see his smiling face once more.

Mr. M. Wilkins, who arrived in Orangeville from Manitoba a couple of weeks ago, has made ten trips to this town since removing to the prairie province.

The young ladies and gentlemen of the town have commenced holding "bread and butter" assemblies. The first took place two weeks ago in the new Campbell block.

Little 9-year-old Evelyn Anderson, daughter of Mr. James Anderson of Hockley, was kicked on the head by a horse several days ago and narrowly escaped being killed.

One day recently the 3 year old son of Mr. Samuel Montgomery of Hockley accidentally fell into a tub of boiling water and was so badly scalded that death resulted three days afterwards.

The Erin Advocate has arisen from the dead and looks bigger and stronger than ever before. The new paper is a newsy, neatly got up 4-page journal. Success, Bro. Hull, is THE SUN's worst wish.

A curling match will take place on the Home rink this evening between the junior and senior members of the Orangeville curling club with Deputy Reeve Green and R. Robinson as skips for the former and D. B. Brown and Geo. Monkman for the latter. A handsome silver medal will be awarded to the side winning in three consecutive matches.

the young school-teacher who had his leg mangled by a G. T. R. train at Caledon station on Christmas eve, died from his injuries at Burrell's hotel, Charleston, at 9 o'clock on Wednesday morning of last week. The remains were taken to Ripley, his native place, for interment.

A DISTINGUISHED READER.—Miss Jessie Alexander, the distinguished reader of Toronto, will give a recital in the town hall to-morrow (Friday) evening in aid of the High School Literary Society. This talented lady has visited Orangeville on several different occasions and, therefore, needs no recommendation from THE SUN. The hall should be crowded to the doors.

ST. MARK'S ANNIVERSARY.—The teachers and scholars of St. Mark's Sunday school will give their annual entertainment in the town hall on Tuesday next, Feb. 2nd. There will be no tea in connection with the entertainment this year, but a superior program will be presented. A large crowd will undoubtedly attend. Doors open at 7, performance commences at 8 o'clock.

SPRAINED HER ANKLE.—A rather peculiar accident befel Miss Birdie Hughes in Hughes Bro's tailor shop shortly after 8 o'clock on Saturday evening. Miss Hughes was getting up from a sewing machine, when she made a misstep and sprained her ankle. Dr. Fraser was summoned and attended to her injuries, and the young lady was conveyed to her home in the South ward.

DEATH OF MRS KITCHEN.—One of the oldest residents of Orangeville crossed the great divide, on Monday the 18th in the person of Mrs. Robt. Kitchen, mother of Mr. James Watson. Death resulted from an attack of la grippe. The deceased was 77 years old and has resided here for half a century. The remains were interred in the Forest Lawn cemetery on Thursday.

CREDIT SALE.—On Thursday, Feb. 4, Auctioneer Jas A. Patterson will sell by public auction on the farm of Mr Geo Moffatt, lot 14, con. 5, east, Mono, the farm stock, implements, etc., belonging to that gentleman, who recently purchased the stage line between Rosemont and Shelburne and is retiring from farming. The sale commences at 1 o'clock sharp, and every thing will be sold without reserve.

LA GRIPPE'S VICTIM.—Mr. George Siggins of John street succumbed to the effects of la grippe on Friday, the 15th. Deceased had not been enjoying the best of health for some time, but he was attacked with la grippe, which undoubtedly hastened his death. A brother of Mr. Siggins resides at London, but he was too ill to attend the funeral which took place to the Forest Lawn cemetery the following Sunday.

WE'RE CHARITABLY DISPOSED.—Two Sisters from the Sunnyside Orphanage, Toronto, paid their annual visit to Orangeville last week and were well received by the charitably disposed people of the town. The Sisters collected $70 in cash and several dollars worth of goods. When worthy charity presents itself Orangevillians are always willing to contribute irrespective of creed, party or anything else. How many towns are there in Canada that do this?

SICK AT DENVER.—Mrs. W. F. Robinson (nee Maggie McKim) daughter of Sheriff McKim of Guelph, is lying dangerously ill at Denver, Col., and the gravest results are feared. Mrs. Robinson, it will be remembered, occupied a position in the registry office here previous to her marriage to Mr. W. F. Robinson, formerly of the Orangeville high school teaching staff about two years ago, her brother, Mr Wm. McKim, being registrar for Dufferin.

A NEW SCHOOL BUILDING.—The trustees of the new school section at Cardwell, Mono township, are asking for tenders for the erection of a building, on the accepted site, lot 11, con. 1, west. The tenders will be received by Wm Jackson at Cardwell, P. O., up till noon on Wednesday, 3rd of February. Plans and specifications can be seen at Stewart, Hewat & Co's store. The other trustees are Messrs. Wm. McCluskey and Hugh Bracken.

CUT HIS FOOT.—Mr. Joseph Reid of East Garafraxa is laid up at present and it is thought he'll do no more work for several weeks. Since Joseph turned over a new leaf a couple of months ago he has been working hard to make up for lost time, but misfortune seems to pursue him still. Several days ago he was chopping wood in the bush and the axe glanced off a tree and cut one of his feet in a severe manner. He will be laid up for three or four weeks.

H. S. LITERARY.—The Orangeville High School Literary Society has reorganized with the following officers in charge: A. Steele, B. A., president; Miss Moir, vice president; Miss F. Collier, secretary;—Murch treasurer; W. F. Seymour, leader of glee club; Em Foley, Annie Clingan, Emma Skelton, D. Atkinson, W. J. Killeen, councillors; reporters, Em Foley for THE SUN, W. J. Killeen for the Post, H. Crozier for the Advertiser. Another meeting was held on Thursday when a resolution of condolence was forwarded to Mr. R. F. Parker, whose estimable young wife died a short time ago. A new departure has been made by the opening of a question drawer. Questions were answered by Miss Clingan and A. McKitrick, and a great deal of amusement resulted.

will dissolve partnership on Monday next. This firm has been doing business in Orangeville for about 16 years, and met with the greatest of success. Mr. Thos. Wright will continue the business and the retiring partner, Mr. John Wright, will turn his two farms on Purple hill into stock farms and raise cattle on an extensive scale. We wish both of them every success.

A GOOD COMEDY CO.—The Emma Wells Concert & Comedy Co. completed a six nights' engagement at the town hall on Saturday evening, and large crowds turned out each night to witness the performance. Marks, the comique, is funnier than ever and Misses Emma Wells and Jennie Ray are, if anything, improved since their last visit to Orangeville. The other members of the company are up to the standard and the whole make a strong combination. The Citizens' band, under whose auspices they played, made a snug sum out of the engagement.

OLD FRIENDS.—It is a great source of pleasure for us to see many of the first readers of THE SUN make their way to the office for the purpose of renewing their subscription to this journal. The veterans can spin many interesting yarns about THE SUN, which was the first paper published around here. Among those who renewed last week were: Thos. Knight, Sam. Corbit, Orangeville, Jno. Tweedy, Grand Valley, Thos. Wallace, Honeywood, all of whom have been subscribers for thirty two years, and Wm. Dale, East Garafraxa, who has been taking THE SUN for over a quarter of a century.

THE OBSERVER.—We have received two numbers of the above paper, a new weekly venture hailing from the Queen city of the Dominion. On seeing the strange face our first impulse was to declare that Toronto was overstocked with newspapers and that there was not standing room for more; but on perusal of the Observer we find that it is different from all other papers in style, vigor and get-up, and with the additional attraction as correspondent or editress of one of its departments our old friend, the accomplished, versatile, entertaining and very original "Marie Stuart." Our best wishes go out to "Marie Stuart" and the Observer.

DEATH OF MRS. MCKIM.—Mrs McKim, wife of Robt. McKim, sheriff of Wellington, died at Guelph on Thursday, the 14th of January, at the age of 64. She has been suffering from cancer lately, and had not the vitality left to recover from an operation performed in the fall. Mrs McKim was widely known throughout Peel, and her hospitality and generosity was proverbial. She leaves eight of a family:—William, registrar of Dufferin, Orangeville; R. A., Detroit, and James, at Denver, Col.; Mrs A. C. Neff, Toronto; Mrs. W. F. Robinson, Denver, and three daughters at home. Her brother Rev. Wm. Shannon, resides at Orangeville. All of those and especially her husband, will have much sympathy in their loss.

DIED AT DETROIT.—With deep regret we record the death of Mr. Charles Lorroe, which occurred at Detroit, Mich., on Friday last. Deceased was ill but a few days and the fact that his wife, who is visiting her parents in Amaranth, did not hear of his illness until the message arrived announcing his death, makes the bereavement a very sad one. He was married between two and three years ago to Miss Golden, the estimable daughter of Mr. John Golden of Amaranth. The remains were brought to Amaranth and the funeral took place on Sunday. A large number of friends accompanied the remains to their last resting place. The bereaved ones have THE SUN's warmest sympathy.

A CURE FOR THE GRIP.—A gentleman of Louisville city, in a letter to Dr. Keeley of Dwight, Ill., stated that he had been suffering for several weeks with the grip. In his reply Dr. Keeley says: I would like to suggest a treatment for grip which I know is nearly specific as well as innocent. It is simply assafetida, given in four grain pills, one pill four times a day. No man need be sick of the grip these days who will take it. For the past two years, with all the patients here subject, of course, to such epidemic, I have had not one man go to bed from the disease. I break it up very quickly, and in fact cure it. If this treatment was generally known it would save sufferers much expense and wretchedness and many useful and valuable lives.

ANOTHER UNFORTUNATE DEAD.—Two weeks ago THE SUN published a list of the unfortunate paupers who shuffled off this mortal coil in Dufferin's great "combination," and about 5 o'clock on Monday morning another of God's poor crossed to the other shore from that institution. Mrs. Scott, a poor old woman over 80 years of age, was transferred from Mono some time ago to don the criminal's garb and occupy a cell in the "castle" just because poverty was her only crime. The poor creature was partially insane when she arrived, but latterly she grew worse and for some weeks before welcome death released her she had to be locked in a cell all the time. It is said she has wealthy relatives in Mono and Caledon, but as is too often the case they refused to support her. The remains were interred in the Town cemetery the same afternoon, and as the procession, which consisted of the hearse, moved along strange voices seemed to murmur the old sad refrain:

Rattle her bones over the stones,
She's a pauper whom nobody owns!

50 yards from the building. A number of willing workers, however, extinguished the blaze before the firemen got there, and their services were not required. The fire originated from a defective chimney, and if it had not been discovered at the time the building would undoubtedly have been destroyed. The loss, which will amount to about $200, is covered by insurance.

A POPULAR OFFICIAL.—On Friday evening, the 15th, a number of the friends of Mr. E. S. Ambrose, late accountant at the Bank of Hamilton here, assembled in the Queen's hotel parlor and presented Mr. A. with a purse containing $50 and an address. Crown Attorney Myers occupied the chair and Mayor Lindsey read the address, which was signed by a number of our foremost citizens, and made the presentation. Mr. Ambrose replied in suitable terms after which speeches were made by Manager Watson, B. Swinton, J. O. Mowat of the Bank of Hamilton, W. Hewat, D. McCarthy, W. Johnston, B. McGuire, and others. Songs were sung by MacMillan, Piercy and Armstrong. Mr. A. left for Hamilton the following evening, whither he has been promoted.

I. O. O. F. OFFICERS INSTALLED.—At a recent meeting of Maple Leaf lodge No. 57, I. O. O. F., the following officials were installed by Bro. D. McMorris, D. D. G. M., of Erin, assisted by Bros. Wm. Fleming, Jos. Riddell, D. B Grown and H. Gillespie: Robt. Hughes, R P G; F. R. Parker, N. G.; W. G Bowland, V. G.; Wm. Bradley, R. S.; Jno Cobeau, P. S.; Rich. Mortimer, R; Jno. Brown, W.; H Gillespie, C.; G. Kyle, O G; D B. Brown, R. S N T; Wm. Fleming, L S. N. G.; J. H Hughes, P. S. V. G.; Robt. Clarke, L. S. V. G; F. J. Bradley, R. S. S.; A. H. Turnbull, L. S. S. This lodge is one of the most prosperous societies in town and has a membership of 60, which will undoubtedly be increased before long. The lodge pays $3 per week sick benefits and has a reserve fund of $1500.

DEATH'S HARVEST.—Death has been steadily at work in this section of the country as well as anywhere else, and one by one the old residents of this town are falling victims to his sickle. On Sunday of last week Mr. William Reid, who resided near the C. P. R. station, was called away, and he quietly and peacefully obeyed the grim messenger's summons. Deceased was a straightforward, honest man and made many friends during his long residence in Mono, from where he removed to town several years ago. Although Mr. Reid had passed his 67th mile stone he had been enjoying excellent health up to a week before his death. A widow and a grown up family of one son and three daughters survive him, and they have the entire sympathy of the community in their sad bereavement. The remains were laid in their last resting place in the Forest Lawn cemetery on Monday, the funeral being largely attended.

Orangeville, Nov. 26, 1891.

We are told age is honorable, but just go up to the jail and see the large number of poverty-stricken, gray headed people on the brink of the grave associating, perforce, with criminals. Every inmate of the jail, whether they committed a crime or not, is under prison rules. What a fraud and mockery our boasted civilization is!

"Like Magic,"

THE effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Colds, Coughs, Croup, and Sore Throat are, in most cases, immediately relieved by the use of this wonderful remedy. It strengthens the vocal organs, allays irritation, and prevents the inroads of Consumption; in every stage of that dread disease, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. D. Conley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, it being more salable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great success was considered marvelous."—R. S. Drake, M. D., Beloit, Kans.

"My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skillful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine; saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers."—G. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Frightful Wreck on the Lehigh Valley—A Fireman and a Brakeman Making His First Trip Perish.

CARBON, N.Y., Jan. 12.—A rear end collision between two Lehigh Valley freight trains occurred in the Rice yard here at 6 o'clock this morning. Fireman McCarthy of Buffalo and a brakeman named Woodruff, who was making his first trip, were in the cabooses, and were instantly killed. Ten cars were wrecked, five of which, oil laden, caught fire, and were entirely consumed, burning the bodies of the dead men.

GRAVES SENTENCED.

He Protests His Innocence, But is Condemned to Hang Next Month.

DENVER, Col., Jan. 12.—Dr. Graves' motion for arrest of judgment was denied by Judge Rising upon the opening of court to-day, and the doctor was sentenced to be hanged during the fortnight beginning Jan. 31.

The accused, his gray hair straggling over his forehead, arose and said:

"Your honor, I never, in any way or in any manner, thought or had anything to do with the death of Mrs. Barnaby."

The doctor was steadily pale while the sentence was being pronounced.

PAID THE PENALTY.

For the Murder of a Performer's Widow at Greenock.

GREENOCK, Jan. 13.—Frederick Thomas Storey, aged 40, formerly outdoor manager of Cook's circus, in this city, was hanged to-day for the murder of Elizabeth Stewart, the widow of a circus performer.

On the night of the crime he followed the deceased, after the performance, and, having caught hold of her, said: "Why do you treat me like a dog?"

On Mrs. Stewart's attempting to escape, Storey drew a knife and stabbed her in the left breast. She died immediately.

When arrested the following curious letter was found on the prisoner:

DEAR JOHN: It is the last day I shall live. Think of me not carelessly; how much I have thought of you and your interests! A woman has spoiled my prospects in life; by the time you receive this she will be dead. I cannot help it; no doubt you will think me very foolish."

Storey slept lightly last night, but dressed himself with scrupulous care, ate a hearty breakfast and died with perfect composure.

G.T.R. EXPRESS.

Canadian Express Co. Business Bought Out by the Grand Trunk.

MONTREAL, Jan. 13.—The Grand Trunk Railway Company has formally taken over the business of the Canadian Express Company in accordance with Sir Henry Tyler's statement at the last meeting of shareholders and repeated by General Manager Seley lant before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. The business will now be known as the express department of the Grand Trunk. Superintendent Bryce of Montreal will still have charge of the express business.

The Canadian Express Company was established in Montreal about the time the Grand Trunk came into existence. The stock was held almost altogether by Toronto, Kingston and Montreal capitalists. The company handled all the business on the old Grand Trunk system and when the G.T.R. bought out the Great Western and Northern and North Western roads the Canadian Company in 1868 bought out the American Express Company's business in Western Ontario. During the past few years the express on the G.T.R. has increased to such an extent that the company was able to pay no less than $312,000 per year, or $1000 for every working day, to the railway company for the use of the road. The business done by the company during the year amounts to over a million dollars.

STRANGE WORDS.

A Chicago Judge Sentences a Would-Be Manslayer to One Day in Jail.

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 13.—Judge Anthony sentenced James D. Fancher to serve one day in the county jail yesterday. Fancher tried to kill Dr. Sawyer, his family physician, because the Doctor had taken advantage of his professional relations with Mrs. Fancher to ruin Fancher's home. In sentencing Fancher Judge Anthony said:

"The party who acts as a family physician should be a man in whom we expect honor, rectitude and virtue. He should not take advantage of his position and the confidence bestowed on him to betray the families of those upon whom he attends. I do not believe that it is a part of the duty of a family physician to be eternally calling upon the wives of his patients when the husbands are absent from the city, whether they are sick or well, or constantly sending flowers with the injunction that every petal contains a kiss."

"As a private citizen hearing the evidence in this state I might be led to exclaim: What a pity the defendant was such a poor shot! In some states the fact that criminal intimacy existed between the doctor and the wife of the defendant would have been a complete justification; but the law is different here, and I sentence the defendant to one day in jail."

DELHI, Ont., Jan. 12, 10.45 p.m.—Fire is now raging in the frame building of James Kemp and occupied by A. Lane as a tinshop. Indications are that several buildings will be consumed on either side will be consumed, and it may probably cross the street if an engine cannot soon be procured.

Lifted an Ox and Died.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Jan. 13.—Ex-Chief of Police Wilson D. Snyder died last night. He bled to death by rupturing a blood vessel while lifting a whole beef on a wagon. He was a powerful man and shouldered 600 lbs easily.

Killed in Texas.

THOMAS, Jan. 13.—William Shawsely of this city, M.C.R. conductor, was killed on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Way at Denison, Texas, Sunday night.

Great Deeds Done.

Great deeds are done by that unequalled family liniment, Hagyard's Yellow Oil, and the thirty years it has been held in increasing esteem by the public would fill volumes. We cannot here enumerate all its good qualities, but that it can be relied on as a cure for croup, coughs, colds, sore throat and all pains, goes without saying.

One city visitor hopped off a south going train Tuesday morning to interview a delinquent subscriber whose face had appeared for a moment at a window. While the deadbeat was making excuses the train went off at half cock carrying the Bohemian to Palmyra. He maintains he got the subscription, but the assurance is not borne out by the fact that he had to borrow funds to get back on the next train.—Tuttenham Sentinel.

Other sufferers from cold in the head and catarrh have been promptly cured, why not you? Capt. D. H. Lyon, manager and proprietor of the C. P. R. and R., W. & O. ferry, Prescott, Ont., says—I used Nasal Balm for a prolonged case of cold in the head. Two applications effected a complete cure in less than 24 hours. I would not take $100 for my bottle of Nasal Balm if I could not replace it.

THE HANDCOCK TRIAL.

OPENING OF THE DEFENCE IN THE CELEBRATED CASE.

The Case Will Go to the Jury To-day—Important Medical Testimony—The Accused's Evidence—Was the Hole in the Skull Caused by a Bullet?

TORONTO, Jan. 13.—The trial of Edward Handcock was resumed at the Assize Court yesterday morning. The monotony of the evidence on the day before had caused the interest taken in the case to slacken, and it was not till the medical evidence for the defence was being taken that the court room again became crowded.

The first witness sworn was Dr. Johnston, surgeon. He described what he considered the characteristics of a gunshot wound in a skull. In his opinion the wound could not possibly have been caused by a bullet.

Mrs. James Dolbey told her story, the only interesting feature of which was that she told Handcock that if he was innocent it would not hurt him if he was hanged.

The Detective's Evidence.

Government Detective Greer testified that he began to investigate the case about a week after the tragedy. The prisoner advanced the trap door theory. This seemed so incredible as to appear ludicrous. He did not think that even Handcock believed it. He very willingly admitted that the whole Handcock family treated him very kindly and did all in their power to aid him in investigating the case.

Just at the point His Lordship objected to anyone in the court room being allowed to handle the skull of the murdered girl, and directed Mr. Clute to take greater care of it.

The detective, continuing, said he had examined the out field near by and had failed to find any place where anyone could have been secreted.

The only other witness for the Crown whose evidence was of any special account was William Jones, a neighbor, who had been passing the store on the Monday prior to the murder and had "heard a row."

In cross-examination he said that he heard Handcock shout to his daughter, "You're all trying to lose me and I'm not going to try to please you any longer."

It was subsequently shown that the prisoner was deaf and always loud. Every other witness for the Crown spoke of the kind and affectionate feelings displayed between the father and daughter.

Opening the Defence.

After the evidence for the Crown was all in, Mr. Murdock requested His Lordship not to let the case go to the jury on the ground that, though it was plain that Sophia Handcock came to her death by foul play, there was no evidence to show that the prisoner did the deed and no motive had been assigned for the terrible deed.

The Judge promised to consider and requested Mr. Murdock to proceed with the defence.

The first witness was Lillie Wilcox, a married daughter of the prisoner, who swore that Sophia had been the one to manage the store. She always carried the money in her pocket. On the afternoon of the tragedy she and her mother looked all over the house for the purse, but it has never been found to this day. A handkerchief which the deceased always carried had also disappeared. The witness also looked for a bailed but could not find any. She swore positively that there was no clay in the pools of blood, for she examined them closely before they were cleared up. The prisoner had always been a good father and considered Sophia his pet daughter. The witness had never seen her father angry.

The Analyst's Evidence.

Miss Edith Curzon, B.A., assistant analyst of Dr. Ellis at the School of Practical Science, tested the skull from a scientific standpoint, and testified that the metal on the edge of the hole in the skull was lead. She did not test the wood, as the paint on it probably contained lead, and would, of course, give the same reaction. A small piece of lead fell from the detective's hand just after he gave her the fragments of wood.

Dr. Teskey was the first of the witnesses to give medical evidence for the defence. He was present at the grave when the body was exhumed. As soon as he saw the skull he said the aperture was caused by a gun shot and he was of the same opinion still. He also noticed the particles of lead on the edge of the hole in the skull on both the inside and outside bevel. He handed the skull to Dr. Harrington and he concurred in the opinion. "No force except an explosive force could shatter the skull like that."

Continuing the doctor said: "After examining the wound I concluded we would find where the bullet had glanced and struck, and mentioned that it must have glanced up. We afterwards found it thus."

Another point in which the injury tallied with a gunshot wound was that the greatest tearing of the scalp had taken place after the bullet had been flattened. He was not an expert in oral surgery, but his examination of the ears of the prisoner showed him that the drum of one ear was thicker than that of the other. This would make the hearing of one more distinct than the other and the result would be that the prisoner would be unable to locate the direction from which any sound came. Enough of the bullet had been pared off to go into the wound and become impacted on the inner edge of the skull, without the bullet itself going inside. The force of a bullet is expansile, that is, it expands in every direction. A skull is brittle like glass and fractures in every direction when affected by an explosive force.

When asked to cite another instance where a bullet had caused such a fracture, he said there were probably not two wounds exactly alike in the whole military service.

More Medical Testimony.

Dr. W. H. B. Aikins concurred fully in the opinion of Dr. Teskey. He, however, could not explain the reason why a bullet striking as this had would cause such a wound.

His Lordship's questions enabled the witness to explain that the flattening and expansion of the bullet after striking the skull had made it act like a wedge. This would account for the fractures running in every direction.

This is the last of the medical evidence—and it is on medical evidence on which the case turns—and the trial will in all probability be closed to-day.

Toronto Notes.

"Pulp" Spohn, the notorious sport, yesterday committed a serious offence and as a consequence he was arrested. He visited Annie Lincoln's residence at 15 Elizabeth street, and while there exercised his pugilistic propensities to the detriment of Nellie Belmont. She swore out a warrant for his arrest, feloniously wounding being the charge preferred and at a late hour last evening he was taken into custody.

About 6.30 o'clock last evening an alarm was sounded from box 47, calling the firemen to extinguish a blaze in Nos. 220 and 222 Bathurst-street, owned by Mr. James Way, and occupied by Mr. J. W. Bowes, grocer, and Mr. George Raymond, respectively. The fire originated in No. 222 by the accidental upsetting of a stove. Mrs. Raymond, who was asleep in a lounge by the side of the stove, had a narrow escape from being burned to death. As it was she was so badly crushed that Dr. J. Ogden, who dressed her wounds, had her removed to the hospital. The stock of the upset into Mr. Bowes' room and destroyed all the launch of effects. The loss is not known, but will be fully covered by insurance.

THE POLITICAL SLATE.

MR. LAURIER DELIVERS AN ADDRESS AT KINGSTON.

Meeting of the Master Connection.—A Report That Mr. J. C. Patterson is to be Made Postmaster-General—Candidates Nominated for the Ontario Elections.

KINGSTON, Jan. 13.—Hon. Mr. Laurier was given a wonderful reception here tonight. The City Hall was taxed to its utmost capacity and hundreds could not gain admission. The leader of the Opposition was given an address and for reply he spoke for an hour, chiefly on the subject of unrestricted reciprocity. He declared that the National Policy had depleted Canada. The only salvation was a change. He favored unlimited reciprocity as the most feasible.

Sir Richard Cartwright gave a review of the benefits which he claimed would accrue to Canada, to Ontario and to Kingston from reciprocal trade, and promised to soon pay his respects to Sir John Thompson and "that young dog" Hon. C. H. Tupper before a Kingston audience at an early date. The meeting was very enthusiastic.

Chapleau Seriously Ill.

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—J. C. Patterson, ex-M.P. for Essex, arrived here this morning and had a conference with Premier Abbott. It was pretty well understood in the leading Conservative circles to-night that he is to enter the cabinet as Postmaster-General. He will have to be raised to the Senate or a seat found for him in the Commons.

MONTREAL, Jan. 12.—An Ottawa despatch to The Witness says: Premier Abbott has been prevailed on by the Quebec local Conservatives to do without Mr. Meredith for the present in order to deprive their opponents of an argument in the Provincial elections. It is believed, however, that Mr. Patterson, who is president of the Ontario Conservative Union, and who has been here for several weeks, has no objection to the use of his name until after March, when he will withdraw for Mr. Meredith.

No mention is made by Mr. Abbott of Mr. Chapleau. It is freely said that Mr. Chapleau can do nothing but resign.

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—Mr. Chapleau is again seriously ill. He is confined to his bed by a renewal of the influenza and pneumonia from which he has been suffering since Christmas and is under the constant care of Dr. Church. Although forbidden to see any visitors, all of whom are refused access to the house, Mr. Chapleau still transacts business and spends the greater part of the morning dictating to his secretary.

Chapleau Wants to Resign.

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 13.—It is reported that Mr. Chapleau has again requested Premier Abbott to accept his resignation. An intimate friend of the Secretary of State told me this morning that Chapleau will resign from the Ministry and sit as an independent member in Parliament. In this way, it is claimed, he will hold the balance of power.

The New Ministers Sworn In.

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—Hon. J. A. Ouimet and Hon. J. Haggart were sworn in for their new positions this afternoon.

East Hastings.

BELLEVILLE, Jan. 13.—Judges Osler and Burton sat at the court house to-day to decide upon an application for postponement of trial of the petition against the return of Mr. S. B. Burdett, Q.C., as M.P. for East Hastings. Mr. C. E. Lyons made the application for the respondent on the ground of his serious illness and the absence from the country of three witnesses. Mr. W. B. Northrup, for the petitioner, concurred, saying he was not prepared to go on with the other charges. After some discussion Judge Burton suggested the dismissal of the petition without costs, which suggestion was by agreement acted upon.

William Smith Will Try It Again.

WHITBY, Ont., Jan. 13.—Liberal-Conservatives met here to-day and nominated William Smith, who was defeated last March by James I. Davidson, for the vacancy for South Ontario in the House of Commons through the unseating of the last named gentleman.

Henderson For Halton.

MILTON, Jan. 13.—The Conservatives of Halton in convention to-day were unanimous in favor of Mr. D. Henderson of Acton, their late member, as their candidate in the election to be held on the 28th inst.

Dr. Spohn Re-Nominated.

ORILLIA, Jan. 13.—At the Reform mass meeting held here to-day Dr. Spohn of Penetanguishene was chosen to contest the East Simcoe bye-election.

The Writ For Laval.

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—The writ for Laval rendered vacant by Hon. J. A. Ouimet's acceptance of office was issued this afternoon.

Halifax Nominees.

HALIFAX, Jan. 13.—Hon. G. Jones and Dr. E. Farrell, the defeated candidates in the late election, have been nominated by the Liberals to contest Halifax for the vacant seats in the House of Commons.

THE QUEBEC COMMISSION.

Little Business Transacted at the First Day's Session, However.

QUEBEC, Jan. 13.—The Royal Commission, consisting of Judge Meredith (president) and Messrs. D. Macmaster, Q.C., and Dansse Masson, held its first sitting in the Court of Queen's Bench Hall in the Court House this morning. Mr. Edmund Lortie acted as secretary and Messrs. Belleau, Q.C., and Marty, Q.C., were present, also Attorney-General Casgrain. Beyond reading the proclamation appointing the commission and the oaths of office of the commissioners nothing was done.

After the recital of the charges as contained in the Royal proclamation Mr. Justice Mathieu called upon those mentioned therein to attend on Monday next, to which day the commission adjourned.

QUEBEC, Jan. 13.—The Daily Telegraph says: "There was a strong rumor current in political circles yesterday that Judge Jette's report on the Baie des Chaleurs affair was sent to the Lieutenant-Governor and the De Boucherville ministers two days ago, and it completely exonerates Mr. Mercier and his colleagues, and that the president of the commission has notified the Government that unless it is made public within four days Mr. Mercier will be furnished directly with a copy for that purpose."

Secretary of the Commission.

QUEBEC, Jan. 13.—Austin Mosher, the Montreal correspondent of The Toronto Empire, has been named joint secretary of the new Royal Commission.

A young fellow named Steen went into the box to substantiate this theory. His story was that he had taken it from Crozier to save it for him—a kindness he had done before. The story did not go, however, and now young Steen is to appear on a charge of being an accomplice of Ward's.—Brampton Banner.

Keep the Works in good order.

NEWMAN, Ont., January 13, 1881.

W. H. COMSTOCK, Brockville, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Your "Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills" are the best regulator for the system that humanity can use. Life is as the times—price; frail and delicate are many of its works. A tiny particle of foreign substance adheres to the smallest wheel in the works, and what is the result?—at first, only a slight difficulty is perceptible in its time-keeping; but wait year; as the obstruction grows, the irregularity increases, until at last, what could have been rectified with little trouble, in the beginning, will now require much care in thoroughly cleansing the entire works. So it is in human life—a slight derangement is neglected, it grows and becomes, imperceptibly at first, then rapidly, until what could, in the beginning, have been cured with little trouble, becomes almost fatal. To prevent this, I advise all to purify the system frequently, by the use of Morse's Pills, and so preserve vigor and vitality.

Yours faithfully,

E. F. ATWELL.

The Rested Rock Salt, for Stock.

Read what Prof. Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says regarding proper ways of salting stock:—"Dairy cattle should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has convinced me that where cows are carried salt for a period of two one week they will yield from 15 to 25 per cent less milk, and that of an inferior quality, than milk with, on an average, from a pint to a quart in twenty four hours less time than milk drawn from the same or similar cows receiving salt every day, all other conditions being equal."

THIS only chemically pure Salt ever discovered, analysed 99 84-100 Pure Salt. All kinds of stock will do better where this Salt is used; one ton will go four times as far as common salt, hence it is cheaper. It is the finest Salt in the world for the preservation of all kinds of meat, all the large packers are using it. It is sold cheaper than any other lump salt. We guarantee this Salt as advertised. ## Sentenced to Hang Next Month.

No Prisoner Will Be Executed, But is Confined to Hang Next Month.

DERBY, Ont., Jan. 12.—Dr. Graves' motion for arrest of judgment was denied by Judge Ribley upon the opening of court to-day, and the doctor was sentenced to be hanged during the fortnight beginning Jan. 31.

The accused, his gray hair straggling over his forehead, arose and said:

"Your honor, I never, in any way or in any manner, thought or had anything to do with the death of Mrs. Barnaby."

The doctor was usually pale while the sentence was being pronounced.

PAID THE PENALTY.

For the Murder of a Performer's Widow at Gravenhurst.

GRAVENHURST, Jan. 13.—Frederick Thomas Storey, aged 40, formerly outdoor manager of Cook's circus, in this city, was hanged to-day for the murder of Elizabeth Stewart, the widow of a circus performer.

On the night of the crime he followed the deceased, after the performance, and, having caught hold of her, said: "Why do you treat me like a dog?"

On Mrs. Stewart's attempting to escape, Storey drew a knife and stabbed her in the left breast. She died immediately.

When arrested the following curious letter was found on the prisoner:

DEAR JOHN: It is the last day I shall live. Think of me not carelessly; how much I have thought of you and your interests! A woman has spoiled my prospects in life; by the time you receive this she will be dead. I cannot help it; no doubt you will think me very foolish."

Storey slept lightly last night, but dressed himself with scrupulous care, ate a hearty breakfast and died with perfect composure.

THE BUSY BEES.

Knights of the Maccabees Elect Officers at Stratford.

STRATFORD, Jan. 13.—At the Provincial Convention of the Knights of the Maccabees to-day these officers were elected:

Provincial commander, Joseph Cairns of Camlachie; past commander, Elijah Hodgins of Stratford; lieut. commander, F. E. Titus, Presque Isle; record keeper, H. E. Trent, Toronto; finance keeper, John G. Muir, Hamilton; chaplain, Rev. G. R. Beamish, Stratford; master-at-arms, H. A. Coombs, Stoney Creek; sentinel, Gardner, London; picket, R. Mackie, Hamilton; representatives to Fraternal Association to be held in Toronto January 14th, Trent, of Toronto, and Scott, of Hamilton.

Berlin, Brantford, Brighton, Colborne, Toronto and Windsor put in claims for the next convention, but it was decided to meet in Toronto on the second Tuesday of April, 1893.

G.T.R. EXPRESS.

Canadian Express Co.' Business Bought Out by the Grand Trunk.

MONTREAL, Jan. 13.—The Grand Trunk Railway Company has formally taken over the business of the Canadian Express Company in accordance with Sir Henry Tyler's statement at the last meeting of shareholders and repeated by General Manager Seargeant before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. The business will now be known as the express department of the Grand Trunk. Superintendent Bryce of Montreal will still have charge of the express business.

The Canadian Express Company was established in Montreal about the time the Grand Trunk came into existence. The stock was held almost altogether by Toronto, Kingston and Montreal capitalists. The company handled all the business on the old Grand Trunk system and when the G.T.R. bought out the Great Western and Northern and North Western roads the Canadian Company in 1888 bought out the American Express Company's business in Western Ontario. During the past few years the express on the G.T.R. has increased to such an extent that the company was able to pay no less than $312,000 per year, or $1000 for every working day, to the railway company for the use of the road. The business done by the company during the year amounts to over a million dollars.

STRANGE WORDS.

A Chicago Judge Sentences a Would-Be Manslayer to One Day in Jail.

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 13.—Judge Anthony sentenced James D. Fancher to serve one day in the county jail yesterday. Fancher tried to kill Dr. Sawyer, his family physician, because the Doctor had taken advantage of his professional relations with Mrs. Fancher to ruin Fancher's home. In sentencing Fancher Judge Anthony said:

"The party who acts as a family physician should be a man in whom we expect honor, rectitude and virtue. He should not take advantage of his position and the confidence bestowed in him to betray the families of those upon whom he attends. I do not believe that it is a part of the duty of a family physician to be eternally calling upon the wives of his patients when the husbands are absent from the city, whether they are sick or well, or constantly sending flowers with the injunction that every petal contains a kiss.

"As a private citizen hearing the evidence in this state I might be led to exclaim: What a pity the defendant was such a poor shot! In some states the fact that criminal intimacy existed between the doctor and the wife of the defendant would have been a complete justification; but the law is different here, and I sentence the defendant to one day in jail."

A Norfolk Village Threatened.

DELHI, Ont., Jan 12, 10.45 p.m.—Fire is now raging in the frame building of James Kemp and occupied by A. Lair as a tinshop. Indications are that several buildings will be consumed on either side will be consumed, and it may probably cross the street if an engine cannot soon be procured.

Lifted an Ox and Died.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Jan. 13.—Ex-Chief of Police Wilson D. Snyder died last night. He died to death by rupturing a blood vessel while lifting a whole beef on a wagon. He was a powerful man and shouldered 600 lds easily.

Killed in Texas.

THOMAS, Jan. 13.—William Shaw, early of this city, M.C.R. conductor, was killed on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railway at Denison, Texas, Sunday night.

Great Deeds Done.

Good deeds done by that unequalled family liniment, Hagyard's Yellow Oil, in the thirty years it has been held in increasing esteem by the public would fill volumes. We cannot here enumerate all its good qualities, but that it can be relied on as a cure for croup, coughs, colds, sore throat and all pains, goes without saying.

The city editor hopped on a south going train Tuesday morning to interview a delinquent subscriber whose face had appeared for a moment at a window. While the deadhead was making excuses the train went off at half cock carrying the Bohemian to Pelaratz. He maintains he got the subscription but the assurances is not borne out by the fact that he had to borrow funds to get back on the next train.—Tottenham Sentinel.

Other sufferers from cold in the head and catarrh have been promptly cured, why not you? Capt. D. H. Lyon, manager and proprietor of the C. P. R. and R., W. & O. car ferry, Prescott, Ont., says:—I used Nasal Balm for a prolonged case of cold in the head. Two applications effected a complete cure in less than 24 hours. I would not take $100 for my bottle of Nasal Balm if I could not replace it.

MANY A LIFE

HAS been saved by the prompt use of Ayer's Pills. Travelers by land or sea are liable to constipation or other derangements of the stomach and bowels which, if neglected, lead to serious and often fatal consequences. The mentleness means of correcting these evils is the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills. The prudent sailing-master would as soon go to sea without his chronometer as without a supply of these Pills. Though prompt and energetic in operation, Ayer's Pills leave no ill effects; they are purely vegetable and sugar-coated; the safest medicine for old and young, at home or abroad.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural and regular action, so that now I am in health."—Mrs. C. E. Clark, Tewksbury, Massachusetts.

"I regard Ayer's Pills as one of the most reliable general remedies of our times. They have been in use in my family for affections requiring a purgative, and have given unvarying satisfaction. We have found them an excellent remedy for colds and light fevers."—W. R. Woodson, Fort Worth, Texas.

"For several years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than upon anything else in the medicine chest, to regulate my bowels and those of the ship's crew. These Pills are not severe in their action, but do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect for the cure of rheumatism, kidney troubles, and dyspepsia."—Capt. Mueller, Steamship Pellois, New York City.

"I have found Ayer's Cathartic Pills to be a better family medicine for common use than any other pills within my knowledge. They are not only very effective, but safe and pleasant to take—qualities which must make them valued by the public."—Jules Hanel, Perfumer, Philadelphia, Pa.

Poetry.

THE YEARS.

They come, they pass, with snow-soft feet,
And deathless youth illumes their eyes;
Alike to them are chaff and wheat,
Alike the foolish and the wise.
They bring the wound they bring the balm,
They light our smiles, they dry our tears;
Carless of death or life, the calm
Servants of time, the patient years.

The winds that rend and strew the rose
Dissolve the sweetness through the air;
Thus wind of time that bests and blows,
Leaves all the past still fragrant fair.
Though hopes may fail and hearts may break,
And fruitless all the striving be,
One golden gift is left to make
Man's bliss, consoling memory.

Hail and farewell, farewell and hail!
The going and the coming guest,
Welcome to daybreak's shining sail,
As to the night beyond the West!
The years may come, the years may go,
And bring the sad or merry mood;
Merry or sad, one thing we know
That life is good, ah, life is good!

The Story Teller.

OLIVE VARCOE

—OR— TRUE TO THE LAST.

CHAPTER XXVIII.—Continued.

I could not say more for tears; I thought that which I did was a duty an expiation. Passionate, willful as I had been, I could not feel all guiltless of this sin. I had not poured oil upon the stormy waters around me; my hasty words had often roused John's dangerous moods, not soothed them. But I had played with fire, not knowing it. Before this crime I was a child, uttering every thought and passion like an unheard nursling; now I was a woman taught self control, humiliation and repentance, by a fearful lesson. I think, but for God's mercy I must have died.

"Florian, my story is ended; only I have left untold—because a pile of words as high as heaven would not tell it—all Charles Vigo's nobleness, his generous pity, his brave defence of that poor outcast, Olive Varcoe."

Thus simply did Olive tell the story of her suffering. Charles Vigo hovered near as she and Florian sat together in the deep bay window at Bosvigo, heard Olive's lips praise him, but he saw it was Florian whose face kindled—Florian, whose eyes paid him the tribute of her tears.

"Miss Langley" he said, "I should like to relate that story to you my way. I should not tell it as Olive has done. I should expatiate on the indignation I felt, when I saw a guilty coward laying his crime on a weak child's shoulders, and that child accepting the burden eagerly, blinded to her true duty by her passionate love and gratitude for people who, in my eyes, had wronged her from the beginning."

"No, no," interposed Olive; "do not be unjust."

"And who now," continued Charls, "were so stone blind in their pride, that they could not perceive the poor girl they have despised was a martyr, piling on her innocent heart all the tortures from which she saved them."

As he spoke, Olive opened the window and stole out into the garden, leaving him to praise her to Florian alone.

"She cannot endure to hear a word against them," said Charles, sadly; "but, Miss Langley, you will, I know, agree with me in thinking Sir Hilton Trewavas a poor fellow, utterly unworthy of that wonderful love which that girl has given him.

"There is only one worthy of it," said Florian, and her eyes filled with tears, "and that is yourself."

Charles Vigo glanced at her agitated face, and a deep color stole over his own.

"I have only done what any man with a man's heart would have tried to do," he answered; "and Olive will never love me for it; I do not deceive myself in that respect; and I have never looked forward to that as my reward. The poor child promised to be my wife, because she had a generous idea that she ought not otherwise to make me suffer any contumely or annoyance for her sake; but never in my own heart have I held her bound by a promise made only in a spirit of self-sacrifice. If I have ever seemed to make any claim on her word, it was because otherwise I could not get to accept the help she so much needed. And you know how she avoided all obligation; you recollect the trouble she gave me and you once to find her? I was compelled to make a claim upon her duty to save her from perishing; but not a real claim. No, Olive's is not a heart to love twice; and without her love what would her hand be to me, Miss Langley? I should break my heart in having so cruel a gift."

As Florian listened to his words her face grew crimson, then pale, then red again, and the brightness of a great hope lifted her spirit from its heaviness. Yet she could not speak. In her innocent self-consciousness she fancied, that the lightest word her trembling lips attered would betray her secret. Seeing her silent, Charles Vigo began to talk lightly.

"Here is the real hero of our story," he said, pulling Bolster's ears. "He brought that dreadful cord to me at the time when I sat by the pool, in a state of horror and bewilderment past telling. The sole clear feeling that I had, was the one that told of Olive's innocence. But the outside world did not watch her as I have—does not know her as I do,' I said to myself; 'and this cord which she lost by the pool yesterday, will secure her.' Miss Langley, I had seen her lose it. Flinging it angrily from her hand as she passed the water, it slipped from her waist and fell to the ground, and I saw it lying on the grass as she disappeared beneath the beeches. But would it avail to tell this? Would it prove that she had not returned to the Bower and use it as an instrument of murder? 'Oh, give me time!' I cried within myself, 'and I will prove her innocent; but I must have time. Ah, good dog; take this to its mistress.' I rose; I patted the dog; I talked to him, and pointed the way to Trewavas. I am convinced Bolster understood every word I said, for he set off at full speed, not by the path, but beneath the trees; and you have heard with what rapidity he obeyed all my instructions."

"But were you not afraid of his being met?" asked Florian.

"Of course I was," he replied; "but I saw it would make things no worse, and the chance of his success was worth trying for. My wish was to keep Olive's name entirely out of the affair; and you can imagine my distress and amazement when I found I had sent her the cord in vain, and she was almost courting suspicion instead of repelling it. But when I saw this,—when I listened to her prayer to me not to say she was in the wood,—when I heard appeal to Lady Trewavas to prove she had not quitted her chamber, the truth came to me like a flash of lightning."

"And not earlier, not instantly, at the pool?" cried Florian.

"Scarcely," said Charles. "The idea had seemed too dreadful, too wild then, and I thought of the foreign sailors on board the Brazilian ship in the harbor. But now it was different; Olive would not take suspicion on herself to save one of them,—would not hide that she was in the wood to avoid giving evidence against one of these. She would do this only for a Trewavas. She would this bear this load of sorrow and contumely herself, to spare them, but not for any other living creature; of that I was certain. At first I did Sir Hilton Trewavas the honor," he added, a little bitterly, "of suspecting him, not thinking him, you see, so grand a knight as poor Olive does."

"Oh, that was horrible—too horrible!" exclaimed Florian.

"Not more horrible than his suspecting Olive," continued Charles Vigo. "But as the shadow came into my mind, it flitted; it did but pass through. I think I have always done him justice."

Florian was silent; she thought more kindly of Sir Hilton than did Charles, and she believed, when the fumes of jealousy were cleared away, he would see him in a nobler light than he did now.

"Go on," she said, eagerly—"tell me all the rest."

"Then I spoke privately to the quick inspector, whose observant eyes had mine once or twice," said Charles Vigo; "and I found he had laid his finger mentally on John Trewavas. 'But there is not a tittle of evidence,' I said. 'That young lady, Miss Varcoe, can speak, if she pleases" he answered. 'But she is taking suspicion on herself instead,' I continued; and I know her—she will die rather than speak. I want to spare her; indeed, I have promised her she shall not be called upon; you see what a cruel task it would be for her!' Then we must do without her,' said the man; 'and meanwhile, sir, get her out of the way, for Mr. Elstick is blind with self-conceit, and Sir Anthony Roskelly is bent on getting a victim.' Then we hunted up that rascal Skews between us, Miss Langley; and—and I think that's all."

"Except all your generous zeal in righting the innocent—except all your courage, coolness, and devotion," said Florian.

"Never mind that," returned Charles Vigo, whistling to Bolster. "What do you say to a stroll in the garden, Miss Langley."

CHAPTER XXIX.

Was John Trewavas sane or insane? This was the great question of the day; and doctors, as usual, differed. Each had his theory to propound. Men, wise in their craft, called together from all parts of the kingdom by Sir Hilton, only added to his distress by their diversity of opinion; and yet he could scarcely wonder at their perplexity; for John, often for days together, appeared as rational as the sanest man that watched him. His health too seemed no worse, though he was worn to a very shadow. But the time now drew near when his doom would depend on the belief or disbelief of twelve men, on the evidence of those doctors and witnesses whom his family had called together to prove him mad; and as the days went by it was no marvel that Sir Hilton's anxiety grew upon him like a fever. At last it was here—the day he had so long dreaded; and John Trewavas, held up his brother's arm, stood at the bar, and pleaded guilty, in a weak voice, low and sad.

Then his council started up, and demanded that a jury be empanneled, to try if he was in a fit state of mind to plead. This was done; and throughout the dreary hours counsel examined and cross examined, and doctors argued and differed, but long before the day had closed, the great point at issue undecided still, the prisoner had fallen exhausted, and been carried away in the warder's arms.

"Hilton," said John, suddenly, as his brother sat by his bed, "have I spared myself any shame, any pain that my crime should bring upon me?"

"None, John, none," he replied; and Sir Hilton turned away his face from the haggard eyes looking into his.

"I know there is something wrong here," said John, putting his hand upon his head; but I have not tried to hide it—I have not sought to escape through that. No, let them find me guilty, if they will. I have suffered the prison patiently—Hilton, have I not? my you say patiently."

"Patiently, John? Yes. God help me!—yes," answered his brother, holding in his pain.

"And to-day, Hilton," said John, clutching at his hand, eagerly, "I did not shrink from that public shame. I let the iron sink into my soul—say, patiently, humbly—did I bear it so?"

"Yes," replied, Sir Hilton, "humbly. God have mercy on you, John! you bore it humbly."

John's haggard eyes lighted up at this with some wild hope.

"I came home to suffer all this—voluntarily to suffer it," he said, excitedly; "that was not cowardly, Hilton. And now will she—will she let me see her again? Will she think this enough? Can she forgive me now? Is there anything more that I can do, so that she may stretch out her hand to me, when I die, and say, John, I forgive you my death."

Sir Hilton's tears were falling, but he brushed them away, and answered, steadily, "you have done all that man can do, John, to expiate your guilt; you must go now to that great, that divine sacrifice for pardon."

John was silent, but Sir Hilton read by his lips that he prayed, and for a minute not a sound crept through the cell. Then again he began to murmur softly, as if to himself, "The poor—it is written: He will have mercy on the poor. Who is poorer than I?—stripped of rank and honor, stained with guilt, covered with shame, stricken with remorse and sorrow—and not always having a mind to know these things, because of the cloud upon my brain—the mist that comes down and puts my thoughts in confusion, bringing me childish tears and idiot laughter. Oh, I am poor indeed! Am I one of poor to whom the promise is given? Say Hilton, is there light?—is there hope?"

For answer, Sir Hilton stooped and put his arm around him, and John, with a wild look, burst forth with a loud voice, singing: "'I will praise him with my mouth, for He shall stand at the right hand of the poor, to save him from those that condemn his soul.'"

Then bursting into sudden calm, he turned his eyes upon his brother in pleading agony. "Oh Hilton, is there nothing I can do?—nothing more?—no reparation I can make?"

"My poor brother be at peace," cried Sir Hilton. "What can you do?"

"Nothing through all eternity," murmured John—"nothing! Oh, blot it out blot it out! Let it not be written against me forever. Let Eleanor say she forgives me—else I cannot die."

"Here is a letter, sir, for your brother," said a man, opening the harsh door softly.

Sir Hilton took it mechanically, but turned pale as he saw Mrs. Maristowe's writing on the envelope. John seized the letter with his thin eager fingers, and tore it open with a frenzied look. The paper was blurred with tears.

"I forgive you," wrote Mrs. Maristowe, "strange as it may seem to say so, I forgive you my daughters death I came into court to day, and saw your face; and having seen it, with all the pain and madness in it, I write again that I forgive you. I do not look upon you as the most guilty, and I wish others—"

But Mrs. Maristowe had here erased her injudicious words, and with a prayer for his peace and pardon she concluded abruptly.

"She has listened to my entreaty at last," said John with clasped hands. "Pardon and peace—she prays for these for me! Peace—can peace come at her cry?"

"Then you have her forgiveness, John," said Sir Hilton. "I am glad of that."

"I wrote to her weeks—many weeks ago," said John, wearily, "confessing the truth, and imploring her pardon; but she would not answer me. Peace—peace—she says peace now. If the mother forgives, will the daughter forgive likewise? Hilton! Hilton! is the gulf narrow, will this pardon bridge it? And what have I done and suffered, will that count for a little?—a breath of a mans hand—a step nearer to her? I must have died, you know, and spared myself all this; twice I loaded the pistol that would have ended all. But that would have widened the gulf—do you see, Hilton?—it would have widened it."

"Try to sleep, John," said Sir Hilton, bending over him anxiously; "you are weary and excited."

"Soon, I shall sleep soon," said John. Then he took Mrs. Maristowe's letter of pardon, and putting it on his pillow, rested his haggard cheek on it. "I think I can sleep now. Peace—peace—peace—she said peace—she prayed for peace. When I die, bury me in the prison yard in a nameless grave—that will be another step—another link in the bridge of pardon. I see the gulf narrower. Put the letter on my heart, Hilton, let it lie there when I am dead. Peace—peace—let us pray for peace."

The word peace died away softly on his fevered lips, and his last breath passed with it. For one moment a deep gray shadow over the wan worn face, a fixed look, and all was still. Mad or sane, responsible or irresponsible, the spirit of John Trewayas was gone to its Maker.

* * * * *

In her grief and bereavement Mrs. Maristowe had not been without comforters. The terrible crime which had struck her childless, surrounded her sorrow with a halo, the glory of which was wonderfully consoling to her self love. Never had she been so visited, so sought after, as she was now. Great ladies jolted over fifteen miles of ordeal roads to see her, and county magnates vied with each other in civilities, invitations, and condolences. All this made life pleasant to her; moreover, the death of her fair young daughter rendered her the richest lady in the land, and the report of her great wealth brought to her suitors, that might otherwise have been Eleanor's. At forty two a lover is not unwelcome; so amid flattery, sympathy, and suitors, Mrs. Maristowe was in no danger of breaking her heart, even over the untimely grave of her only child. Half her liking for John had arisen from the instinct which told her he was a weak man, who, as a son in law, would yield to her every power and influence which the Maristowe property gave; while Sir Hilton, on the contrary, would be lord of himself, his lands, and his wife. In visiting Trewavas she intended John to be her son-in-law; but, thwarted in his hope by Sir Hilton, she grew to dislike him, and to hate Olive Varcoe, whose passionate generous nature was antagonistic to hers in every fibre and vein. Olive not being cut to the conventional pattern of her goodness, was incomprehensible, and therefore a creature to be feared and hated.

From that cruel summer, through the autumn and winter, and on to spring, she had vented this hate of Olive in bitter words, outspoken and whispered. In castles and mansions, in towns and villages, a shadow following Mrs. Maristowe's steps had gathered round Olive's name. To lords and ladies, squires and dames, she had wept weak tears and and uttered weak regrets over her inability to punish the wicked woman, whose hand had been guilty of her daughters death. Her feelings, then, can be imagined when John's incoherent letter unveiled her of the truth. He had done it, and Olive had borne all this contumely in generous pity and in generous love.

As Mrs. Maristowe read John's wild, despairing words and cries for pardon—as she read his entreaties to her to do Olive justice—the felt as Haman felt when he grasped the bridle of the horse that bore Mordecai the Jew, and proclaimed through the royal city that thus should it be done unto the man whom the king delighted to honor.' But she would not take the part of Haman on herself, unless obliged to do so; so she meanly hid the letter, and kept its contents a secret. She tried to think she did not believe it; she told herself John had gone mad with grief, and this self-accusation was a thing not uncommon in the insane.

When Vivan Damerel came to her, he found her querulous and excited, and, until John's confession was published, still unwilling to believe the truth; and when belief was forced on her, she exclaimed, passionately, that Olive had incited John to do the deed, in order to be Sir Hilton's wife; and the more indignant Damerel grew at this, the more bitter she became against them.

"I came hither," said Damerel, "to entreat you to bear witness to John's gentleness and kindness when sane. Your testimony will have great weight with a jury, and surely you will not refuse to show this pity to the family, whose affliction is even greater than your own."

"Let Sir Hilton promise me that he will never marry Olive Varcoe, and I'll say, what I think—that John is quite incapable of crime, when in his senses," she replied, "but without his promise, I will not come forward. I'll never help that girl to reap the reward of her sins."

"Sins!" cried Damerel. "She has been the victim of all our prejudice, hate, and injustice. I am ashamed of my part in the matter; show some generous shame for yours. Mrs. Maristowe.

But Mrs. Maristowe was hard as stone; all her tears and pity were for herself, and all her shame for other people. At length, however, Vivian persuaded her to come down to Bodmin to watch the trial; and once there, he easily prevailed on her, through her curosity, to enter the court. Then she saw John, and seeing all the madness and despair upon his face, her heart smote her with pity, and that unanswered prayer of his for pardon came back to her memory as the desperate cry of a perishing soul. She no longer doubted his madness, and madness is worthy of pity and pardon, even though its hand be red with violence. When he fell senseless, she hurried away, his pale face haunting her; and then with tears of mercy dropping on the paper, she wrote the letter of forgiveness, which calmed the agony of John's despair and death.

"Tell Sir Hilton to call on me to-morrow," she said to Damerel; "I will swear there was no quieter, gentler, or more harmless being on earth than that poor creature; and he must have been mad indeed when this deed——"

Tears stopped her; and used as he was to tears in Mrs. Maristowe, Vivian Damerel pitied her now; and glad to do her behest while her heart was merciful, he hurried away to find Sir Hilton. Thus it happened, that as the great gates of that doleful house wherein his brother lay were opened for Sir Hilton Trewavas to pass out, he saw Vivian Damerel standing in the street.

"I have been waiting for you," said Damerel. "Mrs. Maristowe——" But looking on Sir Hilton's face, he checked himself. "What has happened?" he asked in an awed tone.

"My brother is dead," answered Sir Hilton. "He has appealed from man's judgment to God's. May he find mercy!"

There was a moment's silence; then Vivian grasped his hand, and said, softly, "His death is a relief—a blessing. Do not think me hard in saying so."

Sir Hilton did not attempt to reply to this; he simply bowed his head, and they walked on a few steps in silence.

"I came hither with Mrs. Maristowe," continued Damerel. "I could scarcely refuse her this kindness, though the task is painful. And she is not generous, she shows no contrition for the mistaken judgments of the past. She even persists in her cruel dislike of Miss Varcoe and yourself."

"That she should dislike me is natural," said Sir Hilton. "What is her message for me?"

"One that it is useless to deliver now," answered Damerel. "She desired me to say she would be a witness on your brother's behalf."

"Her kindness comes too late," responded Sir Hilton, bitterly; "and a few days ago it was offered to me through Sir Anthony Roskelly, in the shape of an insult. She would speak for John, she said, if I would give her an assurance that no marriage would ever take place between me and Miss Varcoe."

"She said this also to me," said Damerel; "but I could not bring you such a message."

"Olive has borne too much for me and mine," continued Sir Hilton, "for me now to suffer any man or woman on earth to name her to me, save with all the honor and reverance that are her due. But least of all will I endure a word against her from Mrs. Maristowe."

"You are right," said Damerel. "She and I especially owe to Miss Varcoe a reparation, which on my part, I feel can never be paid in full."

"But Mrs. Maristowe will have no such feelings," returned Sir Hilton. "Here is a nature incapable of comprehending a soul like Olive's. Tell her, I felt too much for her grief to ask her to testify to my unhappy brother's unfailing gentleness when sane; but had she done this at first, and voluntarily, I should have been most grateful. Such words from Eleanor's mother would have been worth much to me; but I would never have consented to to accept this justice from her lips on any condition, loss of all on one involving Olive's name. Tell her, also, that all the [illegible] and all the suffering we laid [illegible] that innocent head will go down now into John's nameless grave; and for his sake, and because she pardoned him, I pardon her this last insult to Olive, sent to me through the venomous tongue of an enemy. This is my farewell to Mrs. Maristowe."

Lost to be seen also, unless our readers care to hear that she married the needy brother of a marquis, and that a son was born to her, whose patronizing foot and childish laughter chased away the sound of Eleanor's name from the halls of Maristowe Court.

SECRETS OF THE GREAT FAMINE.

The Society of Physicians of Odessa applied for permission to publish a medical journal "without previous revision by the Censor," but the Minister of the Interior having decided to sanction the publication, the Censor must pass upon the merits of the manuscript before it goes to press. A Polish publication of Crakow (Galicia), reporting the apparently insignificant news item, has this comment on it:—"The Minister is not a fool; he knows what he is doing. To those who are not initiated in the present policy of Russia, the refusal to print a purely scientific paper without revision by the Censor may appear as an arbitrary law against all reason and common sense. What has the Censor to do with the medical science? Is it likely that physicians as scientists would, in their professional journal, publish aught against the Government or its officials? But such questions will suggest themselves only to those who know not what is going on in Russia. The famine this year is moving away people by the thousands and causing the spread of diseases. The medical science is interested naturally in the study of these subjects. It will try to diagnose the diseases that are caused by hunger, to show the pathological effects of the unhealthy food which is used by the famishing people. All this may, in an indirect manner, convey to the reading public a true knowledge of the state of affairs in Russia, which the Government tries to suppress by all means in its power. And this is the reason why even a medical publication must be submitted to the scrunity of the Censor before it is issued. The action of the Russian Minister of the Interior fully agrees with the policy of the Czar, and wisely prevents the secrets of state, the secrets of the suffering of the Russian people, for being divulged."

A FRIGHTFUL ACCIDENT.—The four year old son of Wm. Burrows, Queen St., met with a frightful and almost fatal accident on Tuesday morning last. It seems that the child was left alone in the house the other children being out at play whilst the father was away at his work, and it is surmised that he got hold of some matches and was playing with the fire and so set fire to his clothing. The little fellow got out on the street. When James Blackburn who happened to be passing discovered the child enveloped in flames he was quick to rush to the rescue followed by Mr. John Armstrong who hastily doffed his overcoat and wrapped it around the child and extinguishing the fire, but not until the little fellow had been fearfully burned about the arms, and stomach. Dr. Heggie was summoned with all haste and responded quickly and applied his best skill to relieve the poor little sufferer. It was at first thought that the terrible pain and shock would be more than the child's constitution could stand and the result would prove fatal, but we are glad to say that the skilful efforts of Dr. Heggie have succeeded in allaying that danger.—Brampton Times.

A bill has been introduced at Washington relating to "Gambling in Agricultural Products." The 'gambling' is defined to be a contract to sell grain for future delivery, the contractor or seller not being the Owner or agent of the Owner at the time of making contract. The bill excludes from the mails, letters postals or circulars concerning 'gambling' in agricultural products, and checks, drafts, bills, money, postal notes or money orders for use of such purpose. It also excludes newspapers, circulars, pamphlets or publications of any kind containing advertisements, telegraphic reports or other articles giving quotations of any market relating to the 'gambling' in agricultural products. A tax of $2 per word is levied on each inter-state telegraph or telephone message used for, or in aid of 'gambling,' referred to in the act.

The combination of pickled pigs' feet in beer, says the Montreal Gazette, which Mr. Hyman made his main dependance in his effort to carry the colored vote in London, has been the cause of a good deal of amusement to to the watchers of the trial. M. J. G. Currie's "raspberry syrup" has become a back number; Mr. Hyman's menu will live in the political memory. The annulling of the election is a good deal of a set back to Mr. Laurier's party. The defeat of Mr. Carling by Mr. Hyman was regarded by the Opposition as one of the greatest triumphs of the election last March. The revelations of the trial, both before and after the holidays have shown enough to establish that Mr. Hyman's return was not the work of the intelligence of the constituency. An unwashed mob whose franchise is bought by a night's guzzling of free beer does not reflect any credit to the representative it sends to Parliament.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Indigestion.—How much thought has been bestowed, and what voluminous treatises have been written upon this universal and distressing disease, which is with certainty and safety dispelled without fear of relapse by a course of this purifying, soothing and tonic medicine! It acts directly on the stomach, liver and bowels—then indirectly, though no less effectively, on the brain, nerves, vessels, and glands, introducing such order throughout the entire system that harmony dwells between each organ and its functions. Dyspepsia need no longer be the bugbear of the public, since Holloway's Pills are fully competent to subdue the most chronic and vexatious cases of impaired digestion, and to restore

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE Reformers and admirers of James MacBulkin, M. P. for North Wellington, gave him a great send off at Arthur on Thursday night.

COUNT MERCIER calls himself a child of the people, says the Toronto Telegram. True they raised him, and their kindness has apparently fattened the Quebec orphan up to the sticking point. The duty of the hour is to stick.

THE campaign is on in Peel and everything points to a great victory for the Conservative candidate, Mr. James Jackson. The Conservatives of Peel should not rest until every available vote is polled. Win the riding back to the Conservative fold and by doing this the bumptious Sir Richard Cartwright & Co. will see that the sturdy yeomanry of Peel know a thing or two about the great trade question.

THE Orangeville SUN recently printed a strong plea for the establishment of a poor house in Dufferin, where the poor unfortunates without home could be sheltered, instead of in the county jail as at present. In ten years 32 paupers breathed their last in Orangeville jail.—Brampton Banner. Another death has been added to the long list during the past two weeks, and two more unfortunate paupers are lying in their iron-barred cells patiently waiting the trumpet's blast.

LAST week's Shelburne Economist says: "Mr. Wm. Johnston, reeve of Amaranth, has been elected warden of the county of Dufferin for 1892. Nothing more exciting than the usual routine of business has so far characterized this January session. A petition signed by about fifty residents of Orangeville was presented, asking for the erection of a poor house or house of industry—at Orangeville, of course." Now, Bro. Smith, the petition did not ask for any such a thing—it merely requested that a suitable place be erected in the county, not necessarily in Orangeville.

OUR Liberal friends tell the down trodden(!) Canadian farmer that he loses 30 cents per bushel on every bushel of barley that he sells and which is exported to the great market of sixty millions of people. If this is the case will some exponent of the "cause" please let THE SUN know why the American consumers and boards of trade are petitioning Congress to reduce the duty from 30 to 10 cents on every bushel of barley. If the Canadian farmer pays the duty what difference does it make to Uncle Sam's citizens if the duty was raised to $1? Don't all speak at once.

WHEN ex-Ald. Youmans' cow by-law was adopted by the council last year many ratepayers thought that the great bovine problem had been solved and that nothing more would be heard about the matter. But those citizens who entertained such views were away off in their calculations, for at Monday night's meeting of the town council Ald. R. F. West of the East ward gave notice that he would introduce a by-law to repeal the cow by law passed last year. Mr. West explained to a SUN reporter that it is his intention to resurrect the old by-law, which provided that cattle be shut up during six months of the year. This cow question will furnish cart loads of excitement yet.

THE Government and Oppositions organs are busy debating the question as to who pays the duty of 30 cents a bushel on barley imported by the United States, remarks the Toronto World. Of course one side declares the American consumer pays it and the other claims that it comes out of the pocket of the Canadian grower. The question of who pays the customs imposts of a country, the home consumer or the foreign producer, can never be reduced to an absolute formula. Conditions may exist under which the home consumer pays the whole of it, while on the other hand under other conditions the foreign producer pays the whole of it. In probably the great amount of instances each pays a proportion—a proportion that again varies with circumstances. What proportions the Canadian barley grower and the New York maltster contribute of the 30 cents that Uncle Sam exacts upon every bushel that crosses the line is difficult, nay impossible, to exactly determine. The fact, however, that the latter is crying out would seem to indicate that they are most hurt. As the design of the framers of the U. S. tariff was to squeeze Canadians, we can afford to witness the self-imposed agonies of our American friends with a profound philosophical calm. If they have learned the lesson that offensive tariffs are a two edged sword they will have learned something for their future guidance well worth the money it will cost. A tariff for protection and one solely designed for inflicting injury on a neighbor are totally different affairs.

MONO CENTRE.

(Crowded out last week.)

FOOT HURT.—Master Harry Parker while crushing grain one day last week had the misfortune to step off the horse-power and had one of his feet badly crushed and mangled in the cogs. He is improving as well as can be expected.

ENTERTAINED.—Mr Peter Turnbull entertained the young people of the Centre on Monday evening and it is needless to say a pleasant evening was spent. Mr. Turnbull has fitted up "Dundee Castle" in grand style and has now one of the finest residences in the township. May he have a long life to enjoy its comforts.

PERSONAL.—Mrs. Joseph Henry is seriously ill with la grippe.....Miss Maggie Laidlaw has returned from Toronto where she has been suffering from a severe attack of grip. She is still very weak but is much improved and we hope to be able to chronicle her complete recovery ere long.....Mr. John Armstrong of Cardwell spent Sunday with friends at the Centre.

Oh, What a Cough!

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease Consumption. Ask yourself if you can afford for the sake of saving 50c, to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Bickle's Cure will stop your cough. It never fails.

BUSTING A BYLAW!

Ald. West says he will Repeal the Recent Cow Legislation.

CIVIC OFFICIALS FOR 1892.

Trouble Over the Assessorship Business.

BUT RYERSON AND PARSONS GET THERE.

Mr. Menary says the Town Weights and Scales are wrong and wants the Matter Investigated.

The second meeting of our chosen representatives took place in the council chamber at 7:30 o'clock on Monday evening. When THE SUN's municipal reporter reached the hall of wisdom he found nearly all the civic officials present. Four or five taxpayers gazed with longing eyes towards those who sat on the treasury benches, and dear only knows what thoughts were chasing each other through their minds. The extreme dulness of the meeting was partly relieved by the strains of music that floated in from the town hall, where the children were practising for St. Mark's anniversary. If this year's council wants to make a good name for itself the members will have to put on their jags and transact business in shorter times.

Shortly after 7:30 Mayor Lindsey ascended the chief-magistrate's throne and called his fellow legislators to order. Those present besides his worship were: Reeve Endacott, Deputy reeve Green, Ald. Menary, Still, Mann, Bell, West, Gordon, Brown and Ald. Riddell walked in just as the clerk was reading the minutes.

ACCOUNTS

were read from J. M. Still, $21; J. Nicholson, $2 50; W. Fremlin, 10 15; H. Moffatt, $3 25; Mrs. P. Johnston, $8 50; ordered to be paid; T. Parsons, $2; E. McLean, $7 50; H. Lafferty, $2.25; A & W. Johnston, $163.04; A. McCaraston, $13; referred to their respective committees. Mr. Endacott and several other members regretted that last year's bills were not presented to last year's council, as it would appear at the end of '92 that the council was really more extravagant than they were.

Mr. Fremlin asked permission to cut trees at the west Broadway railway crossing, where Mrs. Keyes of Amaranth was killed some few weeks ago. Mr. Still suggested that the matter be left to the T. P. committee, but as he did not rise to his feet the mayor called him to order. Mr. Still stood up and repeated his suggestion and the motion was adopted.

Mr. Green read the Assessment committee's report, which recommended that no action be taken in John Graham's request for a rebate of taxes.

Mr. Endacott read Treasurer Irwin's statement for January and the unusual news that the town had money ($3 40) to its credit in the bank was received with enthusiasm.

TO REPEAL THE COW BYLAW.

The great cow bylaw question which everybody thought was settled is going to be resurrected. Ald. West gave notice that at the next meeting he would introduce a bylaw to repeal the cow bylaw which was passed last year. It will be interesting to know how certain members will vote on this question.

Mr. Green introduced a bylaw to appoint a town solicitor and moved that it be read a first and second time.

The council went into committee of the whole on this and several bylaws that were introduced at the last session. Mr. Jno. McLaren was re-appointed H. S trustee.

TOWN OFFICERS APPOINTED.

The bylaw to appoint the officials of the town for 1892 occupied a great deal of time. The proposal to appoint the board of health from the members of the council was looked upon with disfavor, the majority thinking it a wise policy to have the board composed of individuals outside the council. It was left over till the next meeting. The blanks in the bylaw to appoint a medical health officer and an inspector were filled up with the names of Dr. Henry and Chief of Police Shields. A. A. Hughson was re-appointed clerk at the old salary. A little debate occurred when Mr. F. Irwin was proposed for treasurer, Mr. Still moving that the salary be reduced from $200 to $150. He quoted figures from other towns to show that the treasurer was overpaid in proportion to the clerk. A few minutes' talk followed, during which one or two members forgot all about economy and placed themselves in a position to favor an increase of the clerk's salary. Finally the treasurer's pay was left at the old figure. The next matter considered was the advisability of returning to the old style of having only one assessor. In the meantime Ald. Gordon of the Sixteenth ward moved that A. Hughson be assessor and the motion carried. Mr Still was in favor of two assessors, providing the town would be divided, one to take the North and East wards and the other the West and South wards. Nearly every man expressed his views on the question of assessors and a motion that the word "assessors" be changed to "assessor" was put. The vote was a tie—5 to 5—but the chairman, Mr. Endacott, gave the casting vote against the motion and declared it lost. Thomas Parsons, D. C. Lamont and Wm. Daniels were proposed for the other assessor and the former was "elected." The blank for the collector's name was not filled. Quite a discussion arose over the bylaw to appoint a solicitor. Ald. Riddell moved that W. L. Walsh be town solicitor. Before the motion was voted on two or three councillors said they wished it understood that when they voted against the motion it was not against Mr. Walsh. A vote was taken and resulted in a tie, 5 voting one way and 5 the other. Chairman Endacott voted against the motion, and the town is left without a solicitor. The name of R. Shields was inserted in the constable's blank, the remuneration being the same as last year. Mr. Menary was in favor of raising it to $450 or $500, but when it came to a vote he was the only person who favored it. Mess. J. E. Henderson was appointed poundkeeper and Thos. Dawson, J. Avison and J. K. Decatur were chosen as fence viewers.

Reeve Endacott moved that the collector pay to the treasurer all the money collected up to date, also to furnish a list of those who have not paid. The motion carried.

Mr. Menary wanted a special committee appointed to inquire into and test the town weighscales, which he claimed were wrong. The matter was referred to the T. P. committee.

The sum of $25 was placed to the credit of the Cherry committee.

The aldermen and press representatives deserted the chamber at about 10 o'clock.

DIED AT PETROLEA!

A Former Scroville Man Falls on the Street and Expires.

The following despatch from Petrolea, dated Feb. 1, appeared in the Toronto papers on Tuesday:

"A man supposed to be Charles Robinson of Hamilton was crossing the market square here to day and fell down. He was noticed by some parties standing by, who immediately went to his assistance and removed the man to the office of Scott's livery, where upon investigation he was found to be dead. He never spoke a word. On his person was found a policy on the A. O. U. W. for $2000 willed to his son, also an Orange card issued from Marsville county of Dufferin lodge, also a post card from J. K. Leslie, Caledon."

Here is what the Hillsburg Banner says about the case:

'Mr. Dwier received a message from Charleston this morning, asking to know the relatives of Charles Robinson who is dead at Petrolea. Charles Robinson is well known in this section of the country, having lived at Marsville for many years. It is understood that he belonged to the Charleston lodge, A. O. D. W., and it is from them the request for information comes.

FARMINGTON.

BOOMING.—Mr. J. D. McDonald is doing a good business in the blacksmithing line. Jim is an enterprising citizen and deserves success. But he has also got the house fitted up in the best style with stoves, furniture, etc. We expect next week to see it occupied by Jim and—well you can guess the rest.

BRIEFS.—La grippe has been a visitor at almost every house around here.....Our school teacher, Mr. Langford, is giving good satisfaction so far and we hope he will continue to do so.....We regret to learn that Mrs Jno. Curry has been seriously ill with la grippe for some days, but your correspondent sincerely hopes that she will speedily recover from the attack.

BLOUNT.

HE'S BEEN LYING LOW.—What has happened THE SUN's correspondent at Blount, Mr. Editor? Events of importance go by without being chronicled in your paper. We'll try and give you some news every week after this.

LA GRIPPE.—This peculiar malady is playing hob with Blount's population and the fun of the thing is that it seems to have a particular fancy for young married people. We hope the grip will soon give up the grip.

BIGGEST BACHELORDOM GOOD-BYE.—Our old bachelors are getting pretty well thinned out, and another one, Mr. John Crosier, joined the great army of married people on Wednesday last. John has been a favorite around here and he and his bride have the best wishes of all for their future welfare and happiness.

VOTING FOR OUR MAN.—The elections are over, the ladies are being neglected, and now you might throw a stone into a tea-meeting or social without hitting men who were municipal candidates a few weeks ago. They stay away—the successful to enjoy the sweets of office and in some cases to lay schemes for filling promises made before the elections, and the defeated to figure out the cause of defeat. Snell beat Island by a majority of 203; was it because he was the superior man or what? But what principal guarded the electors in marking their ballots, or was it principal at all? In polling Division No. 1 there were 37 electors who voted for only one councillor; in division No. 2 there 86 people who voted for only one councillor, and two of them did not vote for a reeve; in division No. 3 there were 83 plumpers for councillors, No. 4 had 65, div. No. 5 had 48, and div. No. 6 had 48. In all these divisions the law allows a voter to mark his ballot for two councillors, but they were evidently afraid that by doing so they were decreasing the chances of their local man's election. If this sectional feeling is to be carried out cannot some scheme be devised to overcome the difficulty? You then see that a total of 339 electors voted for one councillor and the man elected at the head of the poll (McCluskey) had only 322 votes, and the next highest 289. If these 339 plumpers had each voted for another candidate it is impossible to say who would have been elected.

ROBERT.

They don't know how we voted, so they don't, for I promised both Island and Snell, so I did, but I had to keep quiet, so I had.—Postmaster Woods

Island wouldn't spend four days canvassing for the Lord Bishop of Toronto and now he says I done him no good.—R. McKim.

It's a very expensive coat, do you see; it cost $26, but it's the cheapest in the end; it will do me my day—Kangroo skin, do you see; it's just like R. S. White's, not a particle of difference. I promised to lend it to Carson one of these days—Hem! Hem! but I wouldn't give it to anyone else.—Johnny Blount.

BOWLING GREEN.

(Too Late for Last Week.)

AT THE COUNCIL.—Mr. Ell Driver, our choice for councillor, who headed the poll at the late election, attended the first meeting at Laurel last week. Mr. Driver is a bustler.

MISSIONARY SERVICE.—A short time ago Rev. Mr. Hart gave a grand lecture in the Methodist church on missionary work in China. The church was crowded to the doors and the lecture was the most interesting we have heard for many a day.

PATRONS OF INDUSTRY.—The Patrons organized a lodge at Reid's school-house about three months ago and now they have a membership of fifty. The farmers up there say that they are not going to be cheated any longer, much less than run on, and that they will make some of the Orangeville and Grand Valley merchants howl hay-seed-like.

BIG DANCE.—Last Tuesday evening a sleigh-load of young folks from Grand Valley and a number of Bowling Greenites gathered at the residence of Mr. Jno. Whaley and spent the night in a pleasing manner. The fair sex were both numerous and good-looking, and, Mr. SUN, I don't think you could have beaten in your puffed up town. They tripped the light fantastic to their hearts' content and separated each hoping to get another invitation to meet again in the near future. Mr. Whaley is a wonderful man for entertaining the young people, this being the third or fourth party he gave this winter.

CHURCH CHOIR.—Since the Bowling Green church choir started it has made great progress and the congregation are seriously thinking about purchasing an organ. An Orangeville firm left one about two weeks and another one was brought in a week ago. The officials are on pins and needles to know which one to choose. E. Wills, the old-time stager, ought to know which one would be the most beneficial, and it would not be surprising if he'd rule the roost. We think when the singers get their voices in tune with the organ it will be the best choir in the county, if not in the province. We wish them success.

MONO MILLS.

THE HAND OF DEATH.—The death messenger visited the home of Mr. Quirin Lemon, Caledon township, Sunday, and plucked out the lily which was the adoration of the loving parents—Matilda is asleep in death. "No sleep so beautiful and calm;" yet how heavily does the loss of dear ones press upon us! To the bereaved parents sorrowing over the untimely death of their only daughter, we tender our cordial sympathies.

MONEY FOR ROADS!

Twenty Thousand Dollars to be Spent in the County this Year.

IS THE COUNTY JAIL MISMANAGED?

A Committee will Inquire into the Charges.

THE MATRON'S SALARY INCREASED.

The County Fathers Wound up the Business on Friday.

THURSDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

All the county councillors were in their places on Thursday morning. Several accounts and unimportant communications were read and referred to the different committees, and then Mr. Park read the special committee's report

ON THE WARDEN'S SALARY.

It recommended that instead of voting the warden $100 at the end of the year he should receive $5 and mileage each way each day when his presence, officially, were required. The report was adopted.

Mr. Endacott brought in a report of the County Property committee.

This concluded the morning session and the council adjourned until 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

THE MATRON'S SALARY INCREASED.

Mr. McGhee read two reports of the Finance committee. Report No. 1 recommended an increase of $50 in Mrs. Sutherland's (the jail matron) salary. Mr. Gowan moved, seconded by Mr. McGhee that the report be adopted. Quite a discussion arose at this point during which Mr. Dynes said that he imagined that the salary was high enough. He moved in amendment that the council go into committee of the whole on that clause. The council went into committee and Mr. Dynes demanded the yeas and nays on his motion to strike out the clause and it was lost on the following vote: Yea—Hamilton, Turner, Henderson, Snell, Dynes, Still and Simpson—7.

Nay—Park, McCelland, McGhee, McDowell, Gowan, Gallaugher, Green, Endacott, Jelly—9.

A number of bylaws legalizing the recommendations of the reports were introduced and at a later stage passed.

$20000 FOR ROADS.

Mr. Jelly presented the R. & B. report, which recommended that the sum of $20000 be spent in improving the roads of the county. The report was adopted by a majority of 2. Here is a copy of the report dealing with the subject:

After the most deliberate consideration your committee would recommend that the sum of not exceeding $20000 be raised by debentures for road purposes, and that the same be expended as nearly as practical in the following manner: On the town line between Amaranth and East Garafraxa, $2200, in East Luther, north of Grand Valley, $100; town line between East Luther, Amaranth and Melancthon, $2000; Shrigley road leading to Dundalk, $1700 leading road north of Shelburne, in Melancthon, $1400; 25 side road, Mulmur, $1000; 10 side road, Mulmur, $1500; 20 side road, Mulmur, $500; town line between Mono and Mulmur, $1600; Prince of Wales road between Orangeville and Primrose, $2300; Hockley road, Mono, $900; 5th line, north of Laurel, Amaranth, $800; 3rd line, Amaranth, south of Shelburne, $300; Orangeville and Reading road, East Garafraxa, $900; in Orangeville, on road east of the Perfect house, $500; town line between Mono and Caledon, county of Peel, $500, on condition that it be supplemented by the council of Peel.

An adjournment until to morrow was made.

FRIDAY'S BUSINESS.

All the members except Mr. McGhee, were on hand. A by-law providing for raising $20000 to be expended on roads was put through as far as possible. The warden, together with the reeves of Orangeville and Shelburne, were appointed a committee to devise and lay before the council at its special meeting on May 31st, the best scheme to expend the money on the roads. A number of other by laws received their third readings.

ARE THE CHARGES TRUE?

Nothing of importance was done at the afternoon until Mr. Dynes moved, seconded by Mr. Turner, "That whereas certain rumors, which we believe to be true, regarding the governor of the jail keeping private boarders, which is contrary to law, and also wrongfully using provisions and supplies, therefore be it resolved that a committee consisting of Messrs. Endacott, Simpson and the mover be appointed to fully investigate the matter and report the result of their investigation to this council at its next session." The motion carried.

The council then adjourned after a four days' session.

HOCKLEY.

LITTLE LOCALS.—Mr. W. H. White has retired from farming and has removed his family to Guelph.....Mr. Robt. Dunn, who has run one of the blacksmith shops here for some time, has retired, and returned to his farm in Adjala.....Mrs. Lindsey is, we are sorry to say, not improving as rapidly as hoped for.

A LIVELY RUNAWAY.—On Tuesday week James Wallace's team, which were being driven by Mr. Belford, ran away in the Hockley swamp and kept up their mad dash for over a mile. The driver held on to the animals for a long distance but was compelled to let go his hold. Andy Donaldson captured the runaways and displayed a great deal of nerve. Belford was so badly used up that he had to lay off work.

DEATH OF MR. JOHN SUMMERVILLE.—Mr. John Summerville, long and favourable known as an upright, conscientious citizen, passed away at his residence, 1st con., Adjala, on Friday night after a short illness of only five days. Deceased was about 47 years old and leaves a widow and family of five who will have the sympathy of all in their sad bereavement. The remains were laid to rest in St. John's church burying ground on Sunday afternoon, a large number of sorrowing relatives and friends being present to pay a last token of respect and esteem to his memory.

A General Overcome.

DEAR SUN.—I suffered from general weakness and debility and my system was completely run down and I found B. B. B. the best medicine I ever tried. I would not be without it for a great deal.

A BROKEN AXLE — The C. P. R. Friday morning train from Owen Sound met with an accident at Orangeville Junction, one of the axles of the engine tender breaking. Both down trains were over two hours late in arriving at the station here.

SOLD OUT.—Mr. D. McMorris of Erin has sold out his large planing mill at that place to Messrs. R. H. and A. E. Young of this town, who take possession immediately. Mr. McMorris' friends are inducing him to return to Orangeville and it is altogether likely the genial Dave will again become a citizen of our town.

DEATH OF MRS DYSON.—Mrs. W. B. Dyson died on Tuesday at her husband's residence, cor. Niagara and Tecumseth streets, Toronto, after a brief illness of la grippe, in the 37th year of her age. She was the eldest daughter of the late James Sampson, master mechanic T. G. & B. Railway, Orangeville.

to about $20.

NEW DEVELOPMENT OF AN OLD GAME.—"Duplicate Whist" is the newest development of one of the oldest games of cards. The game consists of a redistribution of "hands," so that each pair of partners shall play with the same cards, which their adversaries have used, the game being thus purged of the element of luck and made to depend upon skill.

AN EXCELLENT ENTERTAINMENT.—The teachers and scholars of St. Mark's S. S. held their annual entertainment in the town hall on Tuesday evening, and it was one of the most pleasant events of the season. The program was something grand and the audience enjoyed it immensely. Earlier in the evening the teachers entertained the scholars to a supper.

RUNAWAY AT CATARACT.—Several days ago Messrs. Theo. Donner and John Gahan were on a pleasure trip to Cataract and when on the homeward journey met with an exciting incident. Mr. Donner's spirited trotter, which was hitched to a fine cutter, became frightened on one of the hills and ran away, throwing the occupants out. They escaped injury, however, but the cutter was badly damaged.

HE WILL PAY UP.—Two years ago John Young ran a fruit and confectionery store in this town. After a short business career he was compelled to make an assignment for the benefit of his creditors. The estate paid only a few cents on the dollar and the proprietor shortly afterwards left town. Jack has been in Minneapolis, Minn., for some time, and a friend informed THE SUN that he will soon come back and pay up his old scores.

THE COLLECTOR PUNCHED.—Some time ago a local business man placed a number of his accounts into the hands of a "dogger" for collection. The collector got down to work, but the first call that he made resulted rather differently from what he expected. The debtor disputed the bill, and the dispute finally wound up in a fight. The citizen punched the collector for a while and then deposited him on the street. The disputed account is not settled yet and it is not necessary to say that the collector failed to make the second call.

L. O. COUNTY MEETING.—About seventy-five members of the Loyal Orange County Lodge of Dufferin met in the lodge-room of L. O. L. No. 635, Drury block, on Tuesday and transacted a great deal of business. The proceedings were most harmonious throughout, and everything passed off pleasantly. The following officers were elected for the ensuing term: J. B. Reid, C. M.; George Holmes, D. C. M.; John Bailey, chap.; J. A. McMaster, R. S.; R. Allen, F. S.; T. Holmes, jr., treas.; —Bowey, D. of C.; A. Glover, J. A. Balford, lecturers; B. McGuire, tyler.

NO, WE WON'T.—Orangeville boasts of a first-class fire-hall and the best modern appliances for putting out fires, but from the account of persons who were eyewitnesses of the efforts of the brigade at the fire at Mr. Joe Hughes, residence last Friday, there must be something wrong with the institution. It is said that before a line of hose was laid to the scene of the conflagration the furniture had been removed from the house, a large hole made in the roof and the fire extinguished. The town council had better sell the hall and all the rest of the fire apparatus and invest in a few pails.—Hillsburg Beaver.

THE BEST YET.—Yesterday we received the most handsome catalogue of seeds, bulbs, plants, etc., ever sent out in America, from the well known Canadian firm of The Steele Bros Co., Toronto. The immense business success of this enterprising house is wonderful. They attribute it to the high grade of seeds they supply—coupled with business energy and care. For '92 they offer Campbell's white chaff wheat, a great yielder, Early Gothland, and Golden Giant oats three new potatoes, and the wonderful Priestaker onion, beside an endless array of novelties in flowers, Stanley's Wash Tub, Spider Lilies, Air Plant, Sword Fern, etc. They make a a special offer to mail two Chinese Sacred Lilies (to plant in water now), value 40c., and their grand new catalogue, with 477 illustrations, value 20c., all for only 25c. Farmers, gardeners and amateurs should all send for them at once.

W. J. MIDDLETON DEAD.—It is our sad duty this week to chronicle the death of Mr. W. J. Middleton, proprietor of the Russell house, Toronto, which took place on Sunday. Mr. Middleton was stricken down with la grippe on Christmas day and as time went by it developed into congestion of the brain, which caused his death at the time mentioned above. Deceased was well known and highly respected around Orangeville, and nobody had a an unkind word to say about him. He built and owned the Gordon house here and ran it for a number of years. The remains were brought up to Orangeville on Tuesday morning. A large number of friends met the body at the C. P. R. station and a procession was formed and followed the remains to St. Mark's church, where Rev. A. Henderson delivered a touching funeral sermon. The casket was opened in the church and many took a last look at the face they know so well. After the services were over the remains were conveyed to the Town cemetery and all that was mortal of W. J. Middleton was laid to rest in the family plot. Mr. Middleton was a member of the Masonic and A. O. U. W. orders, and a large number of brethren of both societies were in attendance at the funeral. Public School Trustee J. E. Booth, Orangeville, and Messrs. J. H. Shearer, H. Morrison, J. F. Scholes, P. Kerwick and J. Alexander, Toronto, acted as pallbearers. Besides a widow, two sons and two daughters, all of whom are married, survive him and have the sympathy of all in their sad bereavement.

trial. The evidence of Walter Booth, who runs a barber shop in the same building that Fletcher's law office is situated in, W. H. Myers, J. McLeod, the girl's father, and herself were the witnesses for the prosecution. The two first-named witnesses were in the barber shop and could see into the office. They saw the girl sitting on Fletcher's knee and heard her scream. Lottie McLeod, the complaint's daughter, swore that she went to Fletcher's office for the purpose of getting his laundry, as her mother took in washing. When she went the Tuesday in question and would not let her out. He made a number of insulting propositions to her and she screamed to get out. The witness said something further, but there was really no evidence to show that any attempt had been made to assault her.

FLETCHER LOCKED THE DOOR

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL

The presiding magistrate considered the evidence sufficient to warrant his sending the prisoner up for trial, which he accordingly did. The unfortunate limb of the law was brought to town on Saturday night and has been a guest of Gov. Sutherland ever since. He will likely come before Judge McCarthy at an early date.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BOARD.

Teacher Bruce's Salary Increased by $50—Other Business.

The Orangeville public school trustees held their second meeting in the market room of the town hall building on Tuesday evening, the council room being used in connection with St. Mark's S. S. entertainment. The trustees transacted business in a business like way, and if a man doesn't hustle he's sure to get left.

A few minutes after 8 Chairman Savage called the members to order and a glance around the table disclosed the fact that Secretary Leighton, Trustees Fleming, Booth, Wilcox, Bennett and Dodds were ready to wrestle with any question that might come before the board. Mr. Perdue, who is a pretty regular attendant, was not present.

The minutes of the last two meetings were read and confirmed, after which a number of accounts were trotted out, found correct and ordered to be paid.

A communication was read from first Assistant Teacher Bruce, requesting that his salary be raised from $400 to $450. Trustee Dodds gave it as his opinion that Mr. Bruce was not qualified for the position, and said he was opposed to increasing the salary. Principal Armstrong was asked as to the teacher's qualifications. He gave a favorable reply and Trustee Bennett moved that Mr. Bruce's salary be raised to $450. Trustee Dodds framed an amendment that the communication be tabled. The amendment was put and Mr. Dodds was the only man who voted for it. The original motion carried the remainder of the trustees supporting it.

The board then adjourned after a short and sweet session.

RELIEVE THE POSTMASTER.—It may be generally known that postmasters are prohibited from giving letters or papers out of their offices to children under ten years of age without specific order. We know it would be a great relief to postmasters in villages and towns if the prohibitory age was increased to several years. In Shelburne for example as soon as school is dismissed there is a general rush for the post-office, and the assistant postmaster is troubled unnecessarily by many children who have no instructions to get the mail. A little attention to this matter on the part of parents would not be amiss.—Shelburne Economist. If this same idea was adopted in Orangeville our postoffice officials would be spared a great deal of unnecessary trouble. Nearly every scholar attending the public school calls at the postoffice while on their way home to dinner.

AGENTS WANTED.—In every part of Ontario to canvas for lists of subscribers for the Canadian Horticulturist. This magazine is published monthly by the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, and contains articles written on fruit growing and gardening by leading Canadian fruit growers and gardeners, together with numerous illustrations and beautiful colored plates of fruit and flowers. Agents sending in club lists may have either a liberal commission or in place of money a choice for each new subscriber from the following list of trees and plants, which will be sent them free by mail: Moore's Diamond Grape, the Idaho Pear, Wolverton Strawberry, Gipsy Girl (Russian) Apple, two plants Columbine, Hall Japan Honeysuckle, two Chrysanthemums, two English Violets, a year's numbers of the Journal. Address L. Wolverton, Editor, Grimsby.

AN EDITORIAL DELUSION.—The Shelburne Free Press of last week, in its report of the Christian Endeavor convention held there recently, gets off the following: "A resolution was sprung on the convention, based on the "disclosures" which recently appeared in the Orangeville SUN, and which were copied by the Shelburne Economist, regarding the confining of the poor in the county jail alongside of criminals. The resolution took the form of a request to the county council to erect a separate building for the poor. The convention—and even the president—had not heard that the poor were being in any way illtreated." Dear Bro. Mortimer, you are away off the track. THE SUN never made the charge that the poor vagrants were in any way illtreated in our jail. We merely produced evidence to show that a building erected and used for the confinement of criminals was not a proper place for those who did not commit a crime. Poverty and old age cannot be enumerated as crime, and THE SUN maintains it is a disgrace to a civilized and christian community like ours to treat unfortunate paupers in the same manner as persons who are looked up for the protection of society.

C. A. Bedlier, the oldest barrister in Ontario, died at Hamilton last week.

The wife of the Hon. John Beverly Robinson, ex-lieutenant governor of Ontario, died at Toronto on Sunday, the 17th.

A cablegram of ninety words was received from the Knights of Labour in America, expressing sorrow for the loss of one who had rendered so great service to the cause of labour.

Sir Charles Tupper, the Canadian high commissioner, is ill at London, Eng., with la grippe.

Hon. Mr. Chapleau has been ordered by his medical adviser to spend some weeks in Florida.

Mrs. Gabriel Pocock of Hamilton, a relative of the great Oliver Cromwell, died at that city on Monday of last week.

A Montana newspaper man says:—A farmer in Gallatin County raised 1,000 bushels of popcorn and stored it in a barn. The barn caught fire, the corn began to pop and filled a ten acre field. An old mare in the neighboring pasture had defective eyesight, saw the corn, thought it was snow and laid down and froze to death.

As Mr. Hyman, the Liberal M. P. for London, was quitting a colored man's meeting, he remarked that he was leaving them in good hands and hoped they would have a good time. As he had just seen a bottle of beer for each man carried into the hall, it is fair to presume that with such a lubricant the pickled pigs' feet which formed the other mainstay of his campaign were properly washed down, and his hope fulfilled.

An unpaid tailor's bill of the Emperor Maximilian I. of Germany, who flourished just 400 years ago, has been discovered in the archives of the ancient Swiss city of Coire. The heirs of the tailor are now in possession of the relic, and it has been suggested that they present the bill to the present Emperor for payment.

An experimental sidewalk is now in operation in Chicago. It consists of two movable platforms 300 feet long, moving side by side in the same direction, one at a speed of three and the other at six miles an hour. The young man Weaver, who cut his throat in the Preston lock-up last week, turns out to be a horse thief from near Listowel, and is suspected to have fired the barn of Jas. Curtis, a farmer living near that town, and from whom he stole the horse and buggy. The unfortunate youth acknowledges the theft, but denies all knowledge of the burning of the barn

Bill Ward, the Streetsville terror got his dose this morning—two years at Kingston. Some reader may be surprised to hear that he was in trouble again, but, bless you, Bill couldn't walk straight to save himself. This time Bill's offense was in robbing old man Crozier, while in a fuddled condition of $67. When Bill was charged with his crime he refunded $30 saying he had got it from the man who had taken it.

A Mexican named Juan Lopez, living on a ranch northwest of Silver City, four years ago caught a young mountain lion and raised it as a pet. He had the animal completely under subjugation, and it was as docile with him as a house cat. Lopez was recently married and the lion took a dislike to his wife. During the man's absence last week the animal attacked Mrs. Lopez and tore her to pieces. He then fled to the mountains. Lopez has become insane with grief.

At Alliston a young man fell out of the third storey window of the Dominion house late Christmas evening. Fortunately three strong electric wires were running alongside the building, and his body slighting on them reversed it to feet first, thus sliding to the sidewalk below. Had the wires not been there he would undoubtedly have been killed, but as it was he escaped with a few bruises and cuts.

Ernest Mathison, a gunmaker, 32 years old, who claims to live in Pontiac, was taken from the Walkerville lockup on Friday morning and lodged in the central station, Detroit. The man is violently insane, and while in confinement in Windsor attempted to commit suicide by tearing his throat open with a large safety pin. The Eastern Michigan asylum authorities were notified of his incarceration.

Newspaper people and others throughout the country will do well to give a wide birth to a company of tough looking creatures with a man named A. W. Howard, or as he calls himself, "the Diamond King," at the head. They advertise to give a wild west show, introducing the wonderful drama "Hunted Down," together with the wonderful dog "Tiger." A seedy individual named W. G. Churchill is manager of the show business and "Doctor" Howard is supposed to work off some catarrh cure at $5 a head. With the aggregation are two very fly looking females and a couple of dogs. They did up some Windsor people.

Shakespeare will please excuse us if we modify him thus: Thrice is he clad who hath his system strengthened with Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and he but naked, though arrayed in furs, whose blood is poor or with disease corrupted. An incomparable medicine!

A Kingston dispatch says: A miner while prospecting on John Perry's farm in Barry township, discovered an opening among some rocks which was choked with debris and tangled berry bushes. He cleared away the debris, entered, and was soon in a cave of considerable but at present unknown extent. Two hundred feet from the entrance a sheet of water was encountered. The miner secured silver stalactites, which he has since beaten into rings. The ore in sight is very valuable. Further investigation will follow. It was an old tradition that this cave existed and that the Indians made ornaments from the ore in it. The tradition now becomes a reality.

Last week was one of the coldest ever experienced in the entire Northwest, but there has been little or no wind stirring, and for the most part ordinary discomfort was absent. The cold was of the intense variety that compels careful bundling up against possible perils. To the north and west of St. Paul there has been some snow, but it is very light. The mercury on Friday went down until it froze in many localities. In fact, all through the northern part of the State, in Manitoba, North Dakota and in the Canadian Northwest the temperature ranged from thirty to fifty below zero on spirit thermometers.

The death are announced suddenly, at Galt, of Mr. James Hogg Dalgleish and his wife, Margaret Hogg. Mr. Dalgleish hailed from Yarrow, at which historic place in his early days he was personally acquainted with such notables as Hogg, the sweet singer of Ettrick; Laidlaw, Sir Walter Scott and others whose names are world-renowned. He had the honor of joining with Hogg in the famous Poet's Games and was perhaps the last survivor of the mourners who attended the funeral of Sir Walter Scott. Mrs. Dalgleish was a niece of the Ettrick Shepherd. Her father, David Hogg, the poet's brother, was flockmaster at Abbottsford, on which estate Mrs. Dalgleish was born and brought up. She frequently saw Sir Walter Scott. She witnessed the funeral and saw his daughter Ann leave Abbottsford, all alone and in tears, never to return.

Attacked by an Enemy.

DEAR SIRS,—About a year ago I had a very bad attack of dyspepsia. For nearly four months I never ate a meal without suffering pain after. I had got so weak I could scarcely walk, when one day I saw an advertisement for B B B. and thought I would try a bottle. Four bottles cured me completely, and I am now strong and healthy.

MISS JANET STUART, Muskoka Falls, Ont.

A further cablegram has been received by the Government at Ottawa from the Imperial authorities with reference to the pending reciprocal arrangements between the United States and the British West India islands, by which the latter agree to lower their duties on flour and kerosine oil in consideration of the United States admitting their sugar free. The previous impression that there will be no discrimination against Canada is confirmed and it appears to be now pretty well assured that Canadian flour will be admitted to these islands on the same terms as that of the United States. Grit orators and Grit editors will not have to look for another grievance, for there is none in the reduction of duties on the part of the British West India islands. It would seem that Hon. Mr. Foster's visit to the West Indies was not such a failure after all, and Mr. Blaine has not so much to brag about as it was supposed he had.

WHEN they find how rapidly health is restored by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The reason is that this preparation contains only the purest and most powerful alteratives and tonics. To thousands yearly it proves a veritable elixir of life.

Mrs. Jos. Lake, Brockway Centre, Mich., writes: "Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and cause near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony. I was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do my permanent good until I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could eat an in my condition, my appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life, and I cannot thank you too much."

"We, the undersigned, citizens of Brockway Center, Mich., hereby certify that the above statement, made by Mrs. Lake, is true in every particular and entitled to full credence."—O. P. Chamberlain, G. W. Waring, C. A. Wells, Druggists.

"My brother, in England, was, for a long time, unable to attend to his occupation, by reason of sores on his foot. I sent him Ayer's Almanac and the testimonials it contained induced him to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using it a little while, he was cured, and is now a well man, working in a sugar mill at Brisbane, Queensland, Australia."—A. Attawell, Sharbot Lake, Ontario.

BAD BOYS.—On Sunday evening some boys entered Mr. Marlatt's shop with a key they had got possession of by some means. George Marlatt happened to be passing and saw the key sticking in the door. He thought his father had left the key, so he merely locked the door and walked away, taking the key. The boys after stealing a stock of cigars and cigars made their exit by the back door, leaving it open. The key had been filed for the purpose. Mr. Marlatt says he has a good idea who the thieves are." They have not called for the key yet.

A PRIEST REVEALS IT.

Confession of "Jack the Ripper" given in the confessional.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—A royal commission is to investigate the now almost forgotten Whitechapel murders. A correspondent is informed that the death of a Catholic priest in the east end of London has placed some important revelations in the hands of the police. There can be no doubt that the priest, under the seal of confession, died possessed of information that might have led to the arrest of the murderer or murderers of the wretched women known as "Jack the Ripper's" victims. That the priest had qualms of conscience regarding the sanctity of confession, even in connection with such atrocities, is evinced by the sealed packet he left behind him addressed to Sir Edwin Bradford, chief of London's police department. On the package was inscribed, in the dead priest's handwriting: "This is to be opened after my death—my lips must never reveal it."

The Restof Rock Salt, for Stock.

Read what Prof. Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says regarding proper ways of salting stock:—"Dairy cattle should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has convinced me that when cows are denied salt for a period of from one week they will yield from 1¼ to 1½ per cent. less milk, and that of an inferior quality. Fresh milk will, on an average, turn sour in twenty four hours (continent being equal."

A seedy individual named W. G. Churchill is manager of the show business and "Doctor" Howard is supposed to work off some catarrh cure at $5 a head. With the aggregation are two very fly looking females and a couple of dogs. They did up some Windsor people.

Shakespeare will please excuse us if we modify him thus: Thrice is he clad who hath his system strengthened with Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and he but naked, though arrayed in furs, whose blood is poor or with disease corrupted. An incomparable medicine!

A Kingston dispatch says: A miner while prospecting on John Perry's farm in Barry township, discovered an opening among some rocks which was choked with debris and tangled berry bushes. He cleared away the debris, entered, and was soon in a cave of considerable but at present unknown extent. Two hundred feet from the entrance a sheet of water was encountered. The miner secured silver stalactites, which he has since beaten into rings. The ore in sight is very valuable. Further investigation will follow. It was an old tradition that this cave existed and that the Indians made ornaments from the ore in it. The tradition now becomes a reality.

It takes only this to thoroughly remove Dandruff, stop itching of the scalp, and make the hair soft and pliable. In fact, Anti-Dandruff is a perfect hair basic—all say so who use it.

of St. Paul there has been some snow, but it is very light. The mercury on Friday went down until it froze in many localities. In fact, all through the northern part of the State, in Manitoba, North Dakota and in the Canadian North-west the temperature ranged from thirty to fifty below zero on spirit thermometers.

The death are announced suddenly, at Galt, of Mr. James Hogg Dalgleish and his wife, Margaret Hogg. Mr Dalgleish hailed from Yarrow, at which historic place in his early days he was personally acquainted with such notables as Hogg, the sweet singer of Ettrick; Laidlaw, Sir Walter Scott and others whose names are world renowned. He had the honor of joining with Hogg in the famous Poet's Games and was perhaps the last survivor of the mourners who attended the funeral of Sir Walter Scott. Mrs. Dalgleish was a niece of the Ettrick Shepherd. Her father, David Hogg, the poet's brother, was flockmaster at Abbotsford, on which estate Mrs. Dalgleish was born and brought up. She frequently saw Sir Walter Scott. She witnessed the funeral and saw his daughter Ann leave Abbotsford, all alone and in tears, never to return.

RUSSIAN CONVICTS ESCAPE.—Recent news from Vladivostock is to the effect that fourteen convicts confined in a trans Siberian prison succeeded in making their escape from the guards and the only means they have of providing themselves with private clothes is with a succession of murders. They have already made five victims—three harmless occupants of a farm house, one French naval officer and a Russian band master.

Attacked by an Enemy.

DEAR SIRS,—About a year ago I had a very bad attack of dyspepsia. For nearly four months I never ate a meal without suffering pain after. I had got so weak I could scarcely walk, when one day I saw an advertisement for B. B. B. and thought I would try a bottle. Four bottles cured me completely, and I am now strong and healthy.

MISS JANNY STUART, Muskoka Falls, Ont.

A further cablegram has been received by the Government at Ottawa from the Imperial authorities with reference to the pending reciprocal arrangements between the United States and the British West India islands, by which the latter agree to lower their duties on flour and kerosine oil in consideration of the United States admitting their sugar free. The previous impression that there will be no discrimination against Canada is confirmed and it appears to be now pretty well assured that Canadian flour will be admitted to these islands on the same terms as that of the United States. Grit orators and Grit editors will not have to look for another grievance, for there is none in the reduction of duties on the part of the British West India islands. It would seem that Hon. Mr. Foster's visit to the West Indies was not such a failure after all, and Mr. Blaine has not so much to brag about as it was supposed he had.

The Knights of Labor aim to protect their members against financial difficulties, etc., Hagyard's Yellow Oil protects all who use it from the effects of cold and exposure, such as rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, sore throat and all inflammatory pain. Nothing compares with it as a handy pain cure for man and beast.

The Canadian Pacific railway exhibit of Manitoba and Northwest products which was shown in the well known car down the Annapolis valley last week, is attracting a great deal of attention, and has already been viewed by about 25,000 people in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. At Halifax there were 3,000 visitors, at Truro over 1,500 and at Pictou over 1,000.

in my condition, my appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life, and I cannot thank you too much."

"My brother, in England, was for a long time unable to attend to his occupation, by reason of sores on his feet. I sent him Ayer's Almanac and the testimonials it contained induced him to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using it a little while, he was cured, and is now in well health, working in a sugar mill at Brisbane, Queensland, Australia."—A. Attswell, Stoney Lake, Ontario.

SHELBURNE.

BAD BOYS.—On Sunday evening some boys entered Mr. Marlatt's shop with a key they had got possession of by some means. George Marlatt happened to be passing and saw the key sticking in the door. He thought his father had left the key, so he merely locked the door and walked away, taking the key. The boys after stealing a stock of cigars and cigars made their exit by the back door, leaving it open. The key had been filed for the purpose. Mr. Marlatt says he has a good idea who the thieves are. They have not called for the key yet.

A PRIEST REVEALS IT.

Confession of "Jack the Ripper" given in the confessional.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—A royal commission is to investigate the now almost forgotten Whitechapel murders. A correspondent is informed that the death of a Catholic priest in the east end of London has placed some important revelations in the hands of the police. There can be no doubt that the priest, under the seal of confession, died possessed of information that might have led to the arrest of the murderer or murderers of the wretched women known as "Jack the Ripper's" victims. That the priest had qualms of conscience regarding the scarcity of confession, even in connection with such atrocities, is evinced by the sealed packet he left behind him addressed to Sir Edwin Bradford, chief of London's police department. On the package was inscribed, in the dead priest's handwriting: "This is to be opened after my death—my lips must never reveal it."

The Restof Rock Salt, for Stock.

Read what Prof. Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says regarding proper ways of salting stock:—"Dairy cattle should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has convinced me that when cows are denied salt for a period of even one week they will yield from 14 to 17½ per cent less milk, and that of inferior quality. Such milk will, on an average, turn sour in twenty four hours less than milk drawn from the same or similar cows receiving salt every day, all other conditions of treatment being equal."

THE only chemically pure Salt ever discovered, analysed 99 84-100 Pure Salt. All kinds of stock will do better where this Salt is used; one ton will go four times as far as common salt, hence it is cheaper. It is the finest Salt in the world for the preservation of all kinds of meat, all the large packers are using it. It is sold cheaper than any other lump salt. We guarantee this Salt as advertised. Amanda B. Jones, Earlsmanor, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefit I have derived from my children from the use of Ayer's most excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and was in great fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I find that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the first symptoms of threatening trouble, they are relieved from danger, and are becoming robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1882 I took a bad cold which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. As a last resort I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been without this medicine. I am fifty years of age, weigh over 180 pounds, and attribute my good health to the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G. W. Yeaker, Salem, N. J.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which, by repeated exposure, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thos. B. Russell, Secretary Hudson Conference and P. E. of the Greenville District, M. E. # OLIVE VARCOE

—OR—

TRUE TO THE LAST.

CHAPTER XXX.

It was a fortnight after John's death, and Olive, clad in deep mourning, sat upon a great rock by the sea-shore, looking west-ward. Her eyes were fixed on the dying splendor of the setting sun, whose glory trailed along the sea in lines of purple, crimson, and gold, dazzled by those she did not see creeping near the shore, now flashing into the light, now sparkling in the shadow, a small boat, impelled by a single rower. But her tiny figure, conspicuous in her black garment, stood out darkly against the glories of sea and sky, visible to him as a beacon might be; and with hands nerved but unsteady, he rowed swiftly towards her. Then, as the keel grated on the sand she turned, and saw Sir Hilton Trewavas. He came towards her hurriedly, and as she rose, and would have sprung down from the rock, his hand seized hers, and aided her. It was but the touch of a moment yet her heart beat, and her cheek crimsoned, while Sir Hilton grew pale to the lips.

"Do you hold out your hand to help me now?" said Olive, a little wistfully—"you would not touch me less than a year ago, even to my a last farewell."

"Be cruel to me if you will, Olive," he answered. "I long to hear reproaches from your lips. I wish you would speak bitterly to me; then I might have a hope."

Olive looked at him in the same wistful way; and, as her eyes half filled with tears, she turned her face from him.

"Always the same cold gentleness," he said in a despairing voice. "Oh for a touch of the old waywardness, a flash of the old passion! Shall I never, never see it back?"

"No," answered Olive, sadly; "it is gone forever. Sorrow has broken my spirit to the yoke. I shall never vex the world again with the fire of my tongue."

There was something in her tone that spoke of a broken heart, and Sir Hilton looked at her till his eyes grew dim.

"Olive," he said, pleadingly, "listen to me, I implore you. Do not send me away from you forever. Be my wife, and come with me to Italy for your health's sake. You are ill, you are weak, you seem to me the shadow of yourself."

His voice shook, and he held his hand towards her imploringly as she shrank away from him against the rock.

"I cannot be your wife," she replied. "I am engaged to Charles Vigo. I have promised to be his wife. You heard the promise down yonder at the little inn—when you refused me your love."

"Pity me, Olive!" said Sir Hilton, passionately. I was blind then. Is this your forgiveness, to remind me of that bitter time? Heavens! what right has this man to steal you from me?—to rob me of all I hold dear on earth?"

"You gave him the right," returned Olive, sorrowfully; "all that woman could say to man, I said to you that night. I did not turn to him, till all my prayers to you had failed me."

Sir Hilton hid his face in his hands; he could not answer her.

"And even then," continued Olive, more softly, "it was for John's sake I went. And shall I be so selfish now as to leave the man who helped me? Had I a right to make his name a byword, and heap the world's contempt on him, and then forsake him? No, he has suffered for me. I will be true to my promise to him."

"Suffered!" exclaimed Sir Hilton, catching at the word. "Is it because he has suffered for your sake that you will not desert him? Then you must not forsake me. I tell you it is I who have suffered—suffered horribly. And if we speak of suffrings, Olive, what right had you to suffer for me?—what right to load me with this burden of gratitude, of wonder, of love, and now thrust me away from your life, telling me I shall bear this burden forever, and you will take no payment—you will endure no return of love from me?"

"I cannot help it," said Olive, with a quivering voice; "I belong to Charles Vigo now. But do my justice, Hilton; own that I tried to spare you this pain. Remember how I pleaded with you that night, with what tears and anguish, and with what patience I bore your scorn."

"Olive, you maddon me!" cried Sir Hilton. "Is it comforting to know that this misery is my own fault? And why not have said so to me, then, 'I am innocent!'"

"You would not have believed me," replied Olive, "and to have explained the circumstances surrounding me we'll have been to denounce John. I thought it better to bear your hate than to see you dishonored; and to know the truth would have brought on you the terrible alternative—rash, one a dishonor."

"You would not give me the choice of either," returned Sir Hilton, bitterly. "You let me act in ignorance—reject you in ignorance."

"Could I dare to give you such a choice?" asked Olive. "Could I put before you the alternative of being the denounce of your own brother, or the coward who permitted a girl to take upon herself his guilt? It would have been a shame to help me to lie, knowing the truth."

"You are right, Olive," said Sir Hilton. "I should have been a coward, indeed, if I had kept your innocence not dearer him now—I will not!" he cried impetuously.

"There breaks forth the old passion, Olive, but not for me," said Sir Hilton, in a sad voice.

"No, not for you," she answered; and her face flushed a sudden crimson. "I have no right now to break into passionate tones for you. I told you on that night we parted I would never ask you for love again. To spare your pride, I gave it up, and put my hand in Charles Vigo's, and bound myself to him for ever. Sir Hilton, on that day you saved your family name, but you lost me."

Once more Olive turned away as if to leave him, but he stood before her with outstretched arms, his face pale and resolute.

"You shall not forsake me thus!" he said, with desperate calmness. "I have loved you too long to let you go, and you have loved me. It is for me you have suffered, not for Charles Vigo; and by the mark of your sufferings now upon your face, I claim you. You shall never be any man's wife but mine!"

"Do you threaten me?" said Olive. She smiled as she spoke, half sadly, half proudly.

"You smile, Olive!" he cried, eagerly catching at hope. "Then you do not mean to forsake me utterly!"

"I do not forsake you," she replied; "we shall always be friends, and Beavigo is near; we shall even be neighbors."

Olive said this with her eyes bent on the ground, and a faint color stealing into her cheeks. She had thought in saying it which Sir Hilton did not understand. He fancied it was said cruelly, with the intention to wound.

"Olive, you have grown bitter to me," he cried, angrily. "You insult me, when you offer me friendship and neighborly civility instead of your love. I will have neither. You might have spared me this last insult of neighbor now, Olive."

Olive glanced at him reproachfully, but he read her look wrong.

"Yes, I know," he said, "how I insulted you in the old time—I know I denied love and offered chivalry—I know that before your eyes I promised my hand to another woman, but I did not know that you could stoop to take revenge for all this."

"I revenged myself long ago," said Olive, coldly. "There is no vengeance in my heart now."

"You revenged yourself," he answer off, fiercely; "but how? By heaping benefits on me beneath which I writhe. You chose to bow your soul into the dust for me, and deprived me while you did it."

"No, no," said Olive, gently. "I pitied—I—I loved you."

"Loved me," repeated Sir Hilton, bitterly, "and bound yours if to another man! I do not want such love as that, Olive; I ask your whole soul."

"I cannot give it," she said, steadily. "I have no right to love you now any more than you had to love me when you were bound to Eleanor Marisnope."

Sir Hilton's face paled as she spoke.

"Your words are just, Olive," he said, "though their sting is bitter. But I have a right to love you now; and you know, you have always known, that my love for that poor girl was as a pale icicle compared to my love for you. A moment ago you spoke of giving Charles Vigo your life, because he had suffered for you. You may hate me if you will, but you cannot prevent my doing this—you cannot prevent my choosing exile, and solitude, and sorrow, for your sake. Let the Trewavases die with me, and let the name perish, since Olive Varcoe will not ennoble it by mingling her blood with theirs."

There was a day when Olive had never thought to hear such words as these from Sir Hilton, but now she listened to them in mournful calmness.

"Do for me what you will," she said. "I cannot deny you the poor privilege of sorrowing for my sake. Now let me say farewell: the sky grows dark."

"It is all darkness for me now, and I go out into a dark world," said Sir Hilton. "Olive, your calmness maddens me! You speak to me as Eleanor Marisnope would, and not like Olive Varcoe."

"Leave me, I entreat you," returned Olive, sadly. "Do you know, that great happiness and great sorrow are alike calm? Eleanor's calm was the first, mine the last."

She gave him her hand as she spoke, and as he clasped it, his anguish and despair burst all bonds. The thought that when this hold relaxed, he should never grasp her hand again, made his heart quail.

"Olive, Olive," he cried, as he drew her towards him, "is my misery nothing to you? Will you give yourself to a man you do not love?"

"You try me too much," murmured Olive, reproachfully. "I have given my word to Charles Vigo. I belong to him. If he wishes me to be his wife, I shall marry him. I shall never be yours, unless given to you by his hand."

"And you say this to the man for whom you have nearly died!" cried Sir Hilton, desperately—"to me, for whose sake you endured in silence such agony and shame!"

"It was not such agony as you think," said Olive, honestly. "I had my innocence to uphold me, and the joy of knowing that I was suffering in your stead."

"Oh Olive, Olive! and I have lost you!" he cried; then his voice broke, and he stood silent, looking into her face with a sorrow fast growing into despair.

Olive strove to release her hand from his grasp.

"Let me go!" she said again, gently. But he did not heed her words.

"Olive you have heaped coals of fire on my head," he said, in a broken voice you must have known—I see it in your face—that I would have borne shame and dishonor; for John, though at times shaken to remorse, was surely not altogether mad then, and if suspicion had fallen on him, instead of on me, he must have perished beneath the law. Comfort yourself, then, that in the time I gained for him, his insanity became so undisputed fact, and you have been spared a great shame and agony. So your loss of me is in reality a gain: your pride is saved, your name is saved, and you have lost only Olive Varcoe;—a slight loss, Hilton, for I am but a penniless girl, a dependant, a mere poor relation, unworthy the honor of your name. I know all that now. Believe me, I have learned in the hard world the distance there is between us."

She spoke fast, saying all this with meekness and true humility; but to Sir Hilton it seemed that she had chosen words purposely to torture him.

"Go on, Olive," he said, vehemently. "Why not stab me to the heart at once?"

Olive raised her eyes to his face with sad surprise. It was so new to her to be valued, honored, lamented by Sir Hilton Trewavas, that she could not understand this change in him. The fact was, she did not think much of what she had done, it had seemed to her so natural and right to suffer for her great love's sake. But now, as Sir Hilton's reproachful tone fell on her ear, she blushed painfully, as the thought struck her, that if indeed his love had at last put grown his pride, then he truly had no consolation for her loss, and her words must have appeared to him half cruel, half scornful.

"Oh, Hilton," she said, clinging to him with both hands now, "I did not mean to wound you. I did not say this to remind you that it was for your sake that I put my hand into Charles Vigo's. I thought to console you by——"

"By showing me," interrupted Sir Hilton, "that Olive Varcoe had saved for me my cold dead pride, in depriving me of her living loving self. I am fitly punished, Olive; say no more; it was my cruelty, my hardness, my blindness that forced you to throw yourself on Charles Vigo for the help and the faith that I had not soul enough to give."

"Oh, Hilton, Hilton," murmured Olive, "I thought I was easing for you what you loved best. I thought that Olive Varcoe was nothing to you, compared to your name. And it was not till I had read John's letter, saying that unless I accepted aid, the world place me in safety, and I saw there was no way left to save you and him but by escaping—it was not till then that I sent for Charles Vigo. Though you hated me, though you scorned me, though your cruel thoughts of me made me shudder, I would have kept my love for you if I could. It was for your sake I tore it out of my heart at last, for your sake I flung it away, and would not let it stay me in the path I had chosen. Oh, do tell me now that I did wrong, and you would rather have kept me than saved your brother!"

Sir Hilton could not tell her this, and he was ashamed to say that he wanted both. He could not reconcile himself to the fact that he had lost Olive; he could not believe it, he writhed under the thought. She had been his; he knew now that he had never intended to part with her, and like a man, looking into some fearful pit, he recoiled from the void of his own life, deprived of her. Yet, remembering all that Olive's great love had spared him, he grew calmer, and in his heart he felt that Charles Vigo was more worthy of her than he. Humbled, softened by this thought, he spoke less selfishly.

"Do not not grieve, Olive," he said; "you did well; you have always done well. Mine was the sin; mine be the punishment, mine the loss. You are taken from my life for ever; and my honor and my name are left to me in cold pride, in famine of the heart, and in loneliness. Henceforth I am a solitary man. I will never seek to love or to be loved. Olive, you have pledged your troth to a noble and good man, who succored you in time of need. Bitter as it is to me to say it, I know it would be ignoble in you to desert him now, especially for a man so infinitely beneath him in true nobility as I am;—a man, Olive, who barely forsook you, and unable to comprehend your nobleness, dared in his poor, mean thoughts to stain your innocence with the crime committed by one of his own blood."

Olive was weeping, but she put her hand upon his lips to stay his words, and he caught it, and pressed it there, kissing it many times.

"I am glad," said Olive, faltering, "that you can at last see my duty as I do. I have pledged my faith to Charles Vigo for ever. I will not turn even one lingering look to the past. My life is his to dispose of as he will. He merits this from me, and more."

Then rousing herself from her feebleness, she drew back from Sir Hilton's clasp, and covering her eyes with her hand, she entreated him to leave her.

In the firmness and misery of his love, Sir Hilton longed to touch her lips, and he bent towards her, half hoping she would yield him this last caress.

"Olive," he said in a trembling voice, "you once asked me for a kiss that I would not give; and then we parted, as I thought for ever. Now we part again, but not in anger, and you will not, I hope, refuse me this last sign of your forgiveness."

Olive was silent, but she turned away from his gaze, and waved her hand in farewell.

At that moment he thought of her as he had seen her at the little inn, kneeling at his feet, imploring him for a word, a look of kindness, and his soul sank, and the desire to hold her only for an instant to his heart came upon him strongly like a fever.

"Olive, you cannot, you shall not go

A DETROIT MIRACLE.

A GREAT TRIUMPH FOR CANADIAN MEDICAL SCIENCE.

Particulars of One of the Most Remarkable Cures on Record Described by the Detroit News—A Story worth a Careful Perusal.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan 29th, 1892.—A case has just come to light here, the particulars of which were published in the Evening News, which will be read with considerable interest by all Canadians, as it records the remarkable achievement of a Canadian medical discovery, which has already, in its own country, won great and enduring fame. At this added triumph there is no doubt the fellow countrymen of the proprietors will rejoice, as it sheds lustre on Canadian science. The story is told by the News as follows:—

The following paragraph which appeared in the News a short time ago, furnished the basis of this information—a case it was so wonderfully remarkable that it demanded further explanation. It is of sufficient importance to the News readers to report it to them fully. It was so important then that it attracted considerable attention at the time. The following is the paragraph in question:—

"C. B. Northrop, for 28 years one of the best known merchants on Woodward avenue, who was supposed to be dying last spring of locomotor ataxia, or creeping paralysis, has secured a new lease of life and returned to work at his store. The disease has always been supposed to be incurable, but Mr. Northrop's condition is greatly improved, and it looks now as if the grave would be cheated of its prey."

Since that time Mr. Northrop has steadily improved, not only in looks, but in condition, till he has regained his old-time strength.

It had been hinted to the writer of this article, who was acquainted with Mr. Northrop, that this miraculous change had been wrought by a very simple remedy called Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. When asked about it Mr. Northrop fully verified the statement, and not only so, but he had taken pains to inform any one who was suffering in a similar manner when he heard of any such cases. Mr Northrop was enthusiastic at the result in his own case of Dr Williams' Pink Pills. It was a remedy that he had heard of after he had tried everything he could hope to give him relief. He had been in the care of the best physicians who did all they could to alleviate this terrible malady, but without any avail. He had given up hope, when a friend in Lockport, N. Y., wrote him of the case of a person there who had been cured in similar circumstances by Dr Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. The person cured at Lockport had obtained his information respecting Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from an article in the Hamilton, Ont., Times. The case was called "The Hamilton Miracle" and told the story of a man in that city who, after almost incredible suffering, was pronounced by the most eminent physicians to be incurable and permanently disabled. He had spent hundreds of dollars in all sorts of treatment and appliances only to be told in the end that there was no hope for him, and that cure was impossible. The person alluded to (Mr. John Marshall, of 25 Little William St., Hamilton, Ont.,) was a member of the Royal Templars of Temperance, and after having been pronounced permanently disabled and incurable by the physicians, was paid the $1,000 disability insurance provided by the order for its members in such cases, for years Mr. Marshall had been utterly helpless, and was barely able to drag himself around his house with the aid of crutches. His agonies were almost unbearable and life was a burden to him, when at last relief came. Some months after he had been paid the disability claim he heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and was induced to try them. The result was miraculous; almost from the outset an improvement was noticed and in a few months the man whom medical experts had said was incurable, was going about the city healthier and stronger than before. Mr. Marshall was so well known in Hamilton that all the city newspapers wrote up his wonderful recovery in detail, and it was then as before stated, that Mr. Northrop came into possession of the information that led to his equally marvelous recovery. One could scarcely conceive a case more hopeless than that of Mr. Northrop. His injury came about in this way: One day nearly four years ago, he stumbled and fell the complete length of a steep flight of stairs which were at the rear of his store. His head and spine were severely injured. He was picked up and taken to his home. Creeping paralysis very soon developed itself, and in spite of the most strenuous efforts of friends and physicians the terrible affliction fastened itself upon him. For nearly two years he was perfectly helpless. He could do nothing to support his strength to the least effort. He had to be wheeled about in an invalid's chair. He was weak, pale and fast sinking when his timely information came that veritably snatched his life from the jaws of death. Those, who at that time saw a feeble old man wheeled into his store on an invalid's chair, would not recognize the same man, so great is the change that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have wrought. When Mr. Northrop learned of the remedy that had cured Mr. Marshall in Hamilton, and the person in Lockport, he procured a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through a druggist. He took it, strange it was a desperate sleeping sleep, dropped it, and turned away without a word.

And then was their parting. But, as he round away, Sir Hilton kept his gaze fixed on Olive, till a mist came down from the evening sky between her and him, hiding each from the other's sight.

An hour after this, Sir Hilton Trewavas, with a haggard face, came and stood silently beside Lady Trewavas's chair.

"Have you seen her? Have you asked her?" she said eagerly.

"I have seen her—I have asked her—and we are parted forever," replied Sir Hilton.

Lady Trewavas sighed deeply.

"Then may Heaven help us!" she said; "for you and I, my son, have lost the love of a noble heart."

It was an hour later still then this before Florian found Olive by the sea-shore. She was weary with weeping, and her face was white as snow. Ah! her love was always greater than theirs, and so her grief was greater.

"If I had kissed him," she said, "I could not have let him go. Oh! I am glad I conquered—glad I kept my faith."

And saying this, she bent her face upon the rocks, and wept bitterly.

LADY MACDONALD.

A spirited and Touching Letter to the New York Tribune.

The following letter from the Baroness Macdonald appears in the New York Tribune:—

SIR,—I have before me the issue of your valuable journal dated Friday, January 8, 1892. This issue contains two paragraphs quoted from the Globe newspaper of Toronto, Canada, which paragraphs make a specific, deliberate and most damaging accusation against me.

In these paragraphs it is declared that I am the personage referred to by another journal (the Regina Leader), published in the Northwest territories of Canada, as one of the several individuals who, in the year 1885, engaged in a shady and disreputable transaction," for "the purchase of land near the present site of the Regina capital on speculation." At that date my late husband, Sir John Macdonald, was first minister in Canada.

I know I shall not appeal in vain when I here pray, as an act of mercy on the living as well as one of solemn justice to the dead, that you will cause to be published in the New York Tribune this, my distinct, positive and absolute unqualified denial of that tainted and most cruel charge, a charge, indeed, so entirely destitute of even the shadow of a foundation that my troubled mind is almost as much filled with amazement as my sore and stricken heart is torn by its appearance with a new grief and pain.

I beg to remain, sir, your obliged and faithful

AGNES MACDONALD OF EARNSCLIFFE,

Lakewood, N. J., January 9, 1892.

Commenting on the above the Tribune, editorially, says; "We accept Lady Macdonald's denial as conclusive, and regret that we helped to circulate a baseless accusation."

The Toronto Mail, referring to the matter, adds: "It is too bad that in the heat and insanity of Canadian politics it was thought desirable to strike at a widow that the party might profit."

ANOTHER APOLOGY.

The Globe of the 17th contained the following further reference to the matter:—"Lady Macdonald and that the connection of her name with the article which has appeared in the Regina Leader, and which has been reprinted by the Globe, respecting certain alleged land speculation by Mr. Dewdney in the Northwest, has traveled far and wide; and blames the Globe for having made mention of it as that of the person referred to by the Leader as 'living in Ottawa and wielding great influence,' who was said by that paper to have been interested with Mr. Dewdney. The Globe, it will be remembered, did not originate the charge against Lady Macdonald or any one else, but merely mentioned her name as being that of the person hinted at by the Leader. But as our action has caused pain to her ladyship, we beg to express regret at having made mention of her name at all, to withdraw all that was suggested thereby, and to accept without hesitation the assurance that she was in no way concerned with that or any other transaction in the Northwest."

HORNING'S MILLS.

DRIFTED ROADS.—We had very cold weather on the hilltops around the Mills last week, and the various roads leading to our village are badly drifted. However, the warm weather at present writing is having a soothing effect upon our inhabitants and business and activity are the order of the day.

LA GRIPPE.—A large number in the village and neighborhood are and have been suffering from the Russian epidemic. Some use whiskey, some hot butter-milk, some onions and other something else, but unless either raw or stewed, appear to be the best remedy.

DEWDNEY'S POST.—We were much pleased with your editorials in the last two issues as Tom Ross. The Shelburne Economist suggested Hornine's Mills as being a suitable site. Quite right, just the place and a more healthful locality cannot be found in the county.

PROGRESS OF INDUSTRY.—Three organizations are being formed in rapid order in Melaneur, Melaneur and the northern township of Dufferin, and we think it is one of the best movements of the nineteenth century. Anything to bring down the monopolies will do.

ORGANIC ELECTION.—At the regular meeting of the O. C. O. F., Mr. T. Connell, the following officials were elected for 1892: Past Commander, Geo. H. Lyons; Commander, W. L. Roberts; Recorder, G. F. Atkinson; Asst.-Recorder, J. C. Willier; Treasurer, J. Webster; Prelate, J. E. Emerick; Marshall, M. Anderson; Warden, Chas. Sackwell; Guard, G. A. Roebuck; Sentry, E. J. Mountable; Representative to grand lodge, Geo. Lyons.

and Olive, clad in deep mourning, sat upon a great rock by the sea-shore, looking seaward. Her eyes were fixed on the dying splendor of the setting sun, whose glory trailed along the sea in lines of purple, crimson, and gold, dazzled by them she did not see approaching near the shore, now flashing into the light, now sparkling in the shadow, a small boat, impelled by a single rower. But her tiny figure, conspicuous in her black garment, stood out darkly against the glories of sea and sky, visible to him as a beacon might be; and with hands some what unsteady, he rowed swiftly towards her. Then, as the keel grated on the sand she turned, and saw Sir Hilton Trowavas. He came towards her hurriedly, and as she rose, and would have sprung down from the rock, his hand seized hers, and aided her. It was but the touch of a moment yet her heart beat, and her cheek crimsoned, while Sir Hilton grew pale to the lips.

"Do you hold out your hand to help me now?" said Olive, a little wistfully—"you would not touch me less than a year ago, even to say a last farewell."

"Be cruel to me if you will, Olive," he answered. "I long to hear reproaches from your lips. I wish you would speak bitterly to me; then I might have a hope."

Olive looked at him in the same wistful way; and, as her eyes half filled with tears, she turned her face from him.

"Always the same cold gentleness," he said in a despairing voice. "Oh for a trace of the old waywardness, a flash of the old passion! Shall I never, never see it back?"

"No," answered Olive, sadly; "it is gone forever. Sorrow has broken my spirit to the yoke. I shall never vex the world again with the fire of my tongue."

There was something in her tone that spoke of a broken heart, and Sir Hilton looked at her till his eyes grew dim.

"Olive," he said, pleadingly, "listen to me, I implore you. Do not send me away from you forever. Be my wife, and come with me to Italy for your health's sake. You are ill, you are weak; you seem to me the shadow of yourself."

His voice shook, and he held his hand towards her imploringly as she shrunk away from him against the rock.

"I cannot be your wife," she replied. "I am engaged to Charles Vigo. I have promised to be his wife. You heard the promise down yonder at the little inn—when you refused me your love."

"Pity me, Olive!" said Sir Hilton, passionately. "I was blind then. Is this your forgiveness, to remind me of that bitter time? Heavens! what right has this man to steal you from me?—to rob me of all I hold dear on earth?"

"You save him the right," returned Olive, sorrowfully; "all that woman could say to man, I said to you that night. I did not turn to him, till all my prayers to you had failed me."

Sir Hilton hid his face in his hands; he could not answer her.

"And even then," continued Olive, more softly, "it was for John's sake I went. And shall I be so selfish now as to leave the man who helped me? Had I a right to make his name a byword, and heap the world's contempt on him, and then forsake him? No, he has suffered for me. I will be true to my promise to him."

"Suffered!" exclaimed Sir Hilton, catching at the word. "Is it because he has suffered for your sake that you will not desert him? Then you must not forsake me. I tell you it is I who have suffered—suffered horribly. And if we speak of endurings, Olive, what right had you to suffer for me?—what right to load me with this burden of gratitude, of wonder, of love, and now thrust me away from your life, telling me I shall bear this burden forever, and you will take no payment—you will endure no return of love from me?"

"I cannot help it," said Olive, with a quivering voice; "I belong to Charles Vigo now. But do me justice, Hilton; own that I tried to spare you this pain. Remember how I pleaded with you that night, with what tears and anguish, and with what patience I bore your scorn."

"Olive, you madden me!" cried Sir Hilton. "Is it comforting to know that this misery is my own fault? And why not have said to me, then, 'I am innocent?'"

"You would not have believed me," replied Olive, "and to have explained the circumstances surrounding me as I have been to denounce John. I thought it better to bear your hate than to see you dishonored; and to know the truth would have brought on you two terrible alternatives—each, one a dishonor."

"You would not give me the choice of either," returned Sir Hilton, bitterly. "You let me act in ignorance—reject you in ignorance."

"Could I dare to give you such a choice?" asked Olive. "Could I put before you the alternative of being the denounce of your own brother, or the coward who permitted a girl to take upon herself his guilt? It would have been a shame to help me to this, knowing the truth."

"You are right, Olive," said Sir Hilton. "I should have been a coward, indeed, if I had kept your innocence from me, I have learned in the hard world the distance there is between us."

She spoke fast, saying all this with unbroken and true humility; but to Sir Hilton it seemed that she had chosen words purposely to torture him.

"Go on, Olive," he said, vehemently. "Why not stab me to the heart at once?"

Olive raised her eyes to his face with sad surprise. It was so new to her to be valued, honored, lamented by Sir Hilton Trowavas, that she could not understand this change in him. The fact was, she did not think much of what she had done, it had seemed to her so natural and right to suffer for her great love's sake. But now, as Sir Hilton's reproachful tone fell on her ear, she blushed painfully, as the thought struck her, that if indeed his love had at last cut grown his pride, then he truly had no consolation for her loss, and her words must have appeared to him half cruel, half scornful.

"Oh, Hilton," she said, clinging to him with both hands now, "I did not mean to wound you. I did not say this to remind you that it was for your sake that I put my hand into Charles Vigo's; I thought to console you by——"

"By showing me," interrupted Sir Hilton, "that Olive Varcoe had saved for me my cold dead pride, in depriving me of her living loving self. I am fitly punished, Olive; say no more; it was my cruelty, my hardness, my blindness that forced you to throw yourself on Charles Vigo for the help and the faith that I had not soul enough to give."

"Oh, Hilton, Hilton," murmured Olive, "I thought I was saving for you what you loved best. I thought that Olive Varcoe was nothing to you, compared to your name. And it was not till I had read John's letter, saying that unless I accepted aid, he would place me in safety, and I saw there was no way left to save you and him but by escaping—it was not till then that I went for Charles Vigo. Though you hated me, though you scorned me, though your cruel thoughts of me made me shudder, I would have kept my love for you if I could. It was for your sake I tore it out of my heart at last, for your sake I flung it away, and would not let it stay me in the path I had chosen. Oh, do tell me now that I did wrong, and you would rather have kept me than saved your brother!"

Sir Hilton could not tell her this, and he was ashamed to say that he wanted both. He could not reconcile himself to the fact that he had lost Olive; he could not believe it, he writhed under the thought. She had been his; he knew now that he had never intended to part with her, and like a man, looking into some fearful pit, he recoiled from the void of his own life, deprived of her. Yet, remembering all that Olive's great love had spared him, he grew calmer, and in his heart he felt that Charles Vigo was more worthy of her than he. Humbled, softened by this thought, he spoke less selfishly.

"Do not not grieve, Olive," he said; "you did well; you have always done well. Mine was the sin; mine be the punishment, mine the loss. You are taken from my life for ever; and my honor and my name are left to me in cold pride, in famine of the heart, and in loneliness. Henceforth I am a solitary man. I will never seek to love or to be loved. Olive, you have pledged your truth to a noble and good man, who succored you in time of need. Bitter as it is to me to say it, I know it would be ignoble in you to desert him now, especially for a man so infinitely beneath him in true nobility as I am;—a man, Olive, who barely forsook you, and unable to comprehend your nobleness, dared in his poor, mean thoughts to stain your innocence with the crime committed by one of his own blood."

Olive was weeping, but she put her hand upon his lips to stay his words, and he caught it, and pressed it there, kissing it many times.

"I am glad," said Olive, faltringly, "that you can at last see my duty as I do. I have pledged my faith to Charles Vigo for ever. I will not turn even one lingering look to the past. My life is his to dispose of as he will. He merits this from me, and more."

Then rousing herself from her feebleness, she drew back from Sir Hilton's clasp, and covering her eyes with her hand, she entreated him to leave her.

In the firmness and misery of his love, Sir Hilton longed to touch her lips, and be bent towards her, half hoping she would yield him this last extreme.

"Olive," he said in a trembling voice, "you once asked me for a kiss that I would not give; and then we parted, as I thought for ever. Now we part again, but not in anger, and you will not, I hope, refuse me this last sign of your forgiveness."

Olive was silent, but she turned away from his gaze, and waved her hand in farewell.

At that moment he thought of her as he had seen her at the little inn, kneeling at his feet, imploring him for a word, a look of kindness, and his soul sank, and the desire to hold her only for an instant to his heart came upon him fiercely like a fever.

"Olive, you cannot, you shall not go from me!" he said; "for you and I, my one, have lost the love of a noble heart."

It was an hour later still than this before Florence found Olive by the sea-shore. She was weary with sweeping, and her face was white as snow. Ah! her love was always greater than theirs, and so her grief was greater.

"If I had kissed him," she said, "I could not have let him go. Oh! I am glad I conquered—glad I kept my faith."

And saying this, she bent her face upon the rocks, and wept bitterly.

A DETROIT MIRACLE.

A GREAT TRIUMPH FOR CANADIAN MEDICAL SCIENCE.

Particulars of One of the Most Remarkable Cures on Record Described by the Detroit News—A Story worth a Careful Perusal.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 29th, 1892.—A case has just come to light here, the particulars of which were published in the Evening News, which will be read with considerable interest by all Canadians, as it records the remarkable achievement of a Canadian medical discovery, which has already, in its own country, won great and enduring fame. At this added triumph there is no doubt the fellow countrymen of the proprietors will rejoice, as it sheds lustre on Canadian science. The story is told by the News as follows:—

The following paragraph which appeared in the News a short time ago, furnished the basis of this information—a case that was so wonderfully remarkable that it demanded further explanation. It is of sufficient importance to the News readers to report it to them fully. It was so important then that it attracted considerable attention at the time. The following is the paragraph in question:—

"C. B. Northrop, for 23 years one of the best known merchants on Woodward avenue, who was supposed to be dying last spring of locomotor ataxia, or creeping paralysis, has secured a new lease of life and returned to work at his store. The disease which was above here supposed to be incurable, but Mr. Northrop's condition is greatly improved, and it looks now as if the grave would be cheated of its prey."

Since that time Mr. Northrop has steadily improved, not only in looks, but in condition, till he has regained his old-time strength.

It had been hinted to the writer of this article, who was acquainted with Mr. Northrop, that this miraculous change had been wrought by a very simple remedy called Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. When asked about it Mr. Northrop fully verified the statement, and not only so, but he had taken pains to inform any one who was suffering in a similar manner when he heard of any such case. Mr Northrop was enthusiastic at the result in his own case of Dr Williams' Pink Pills. It was a remedy that he had heard of after he had tried everything he could hope to give him relief. He had been in the care of the best physicians who did all they could to alleviate this terrible malady, but without any avail. He had given up hope, when a friend in Lockport, N. Y., wrote him of the case of a person there who had been cured in similar circumstances by Dr Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. The person cured at Lockport had obtained his information respecting Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from an article in the Hamilton, Ont., Times. The case was called "The Hamilton Miracle" and told the story of a man in that city who, after almost incredible suffering, was pronounced by the most eminent physicians to be incurable and permanently disabled. He had spent hundreds of dollars in all sorts of treatment and appliances only to be told in the end that there was no hope for him, and that cure was impossible. The person alluded to (Mr. John Marshall, of 25 Little William St., Hamilton, Ont.,) was a member of the Royal Templars of Temperance, and after having been pronounced permanently disabled and incurable by the physicians, was paid the $1,000 disability insurance provided by the order for its members in such cases, for years Mr Marshall had been utterly helpless, and was barely able to drag himself around his house with the aid of crutches. His agonies were almost unbearable and life was a burden to him, when at last relief came. Some months after he had been paid the disability claim he heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and was induced to try them. The result was miraculous; almost from the outset an improvement was noticed and in a few months the man whom medical experts had said was incurable, was going about the city healthier and stronger than before. Mr. Marshall was so well known in Hamilton that all the city newspapers wrote up his wonderful recovery in detail, and it was thus as before stated, that Mr. Northrop came into possession of the information that led to his equally marvelous recovery. One could scarcely conceive a case more hopeless than that of Mr. Northrop. His injury came about in this way. One day nearly four years ago, he stumbled and fell the complete length of a steep flight of stairs which were at the rear of his store. His head and spine were severely injured. He was picked up and taken to his house. Creeping paralysis very soon developed itself, and in spite of the much loved efforts of friends and physicians the terrible affliction fastened itself upon him. For nearly two years he was perfectly helpless. He could do nothing to support his strength in the least effort. He had to be wheeled about in an invalid's chair. He was weak, pale and fast sinking when the timely information came that eventually snatched his life from the jaws of death. There, who at that time saw a feeble old man wheeled into his store on an invalid's chair, would not recognize the man now, so great is the change that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have wrought. When Mr. Northrop learned of the remedy that had cured Mr. Marshall in Hamilton, and the person in Lockport, he procured a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through Sir Hilton.

Lady Trowavas sighed deeply.

"Then may Heaven help us!" she said; "for you and I, my one, have lost the love of a noble heart."

It was an hour later still than this before Florence found Olive by the sea-shore. She was weary with sweeping, and her face was white as snow. Ah! her love was always greater than theirs, and so her grief was greater.

On inquiry the writer found that these pills were manufactured by Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and Morristown, N. Y., and the pills are sold in boxes (never in bulk by the hundred) at 50 cents a box, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., from either above addresses. The price at which these pills are sold makes a course of treatment with them comparatively inexpensive as compared with other remedies or medical treatment. This case is one of the most remarkable on record, and as it is one right here in Detroit and not a thousand miles away, it can be easily verified. Mr. Northrop is very well known to the people of Detroit, and he says he is only too glad to testify of the marvelous good wrought in his case. He says he considers it his duty to help all who are similarly afflicted by any word he can say in behalf of the wonderful efficacy of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. If any of the News readers want any further information, we feel sure Mr. Northrop would willingly oblige them, as he has the writer in relating these facts to him.

LADY MACDONALD.

A spirited and Touching Letter to the New York Tribune.

The following letter from the Baroness Macdonald appears in the New York Tribune:—

SIR,—I have before me the issue of your valuable journal dated Friday, January 8, 1892. This issue contains two paragraphs quoted from the Globe newspaper of Toronto, Canada, which paragraphs make a specific, deliberate and most damaging accusation against me.

In these paragraphs it is declared that I am the personage referred to by another journal (the Regina Leader), published in the Northwest territories of Canada, as one of the several individuals who, in the year 1882, engaged in a "shady and disreputable transaction," for the purchase of land near the present site of the Regina capital on speculation." At that date my late husband, Sir John Macdonald, was first minister in Canada.

I know I shall not appeal in vain when I here pray, as an act of mercy on the living as well as one of solemn justice to the dead, that you will cause to be published in the New York Tribune this, my distinct, positive and absolute unqualified denial of that baseless and most cruel charge, a charge, indeed, so entirely destitute of even the shadow of a foundation that my troubled mind is almost as much filled with wonderment as my sore and stricken heart is torn by its appearance with a new grief and pain.

I beg to remain, sir, your obliged and faithful

AGNES MACDONALD OF KINGSTON,
Lakewood, N. J., January 9, 1892.

Commenting on the above the Tribune, editorially, says: "We accept Lady Macdonald's denial as conclusive, and regret that we helped to circulate a baseless accusation."

The Toronto Mail, referring to the matter, adds: "It is too bad that in the heat and insanity of Canadian politics it was thought desirable to strike at a widow that the party might profit."

ANOTHER APOLOGY.

The Globe of the 17th contained the following further reference to the matter—"Lady Macdonald and that the connection of her name with the article which has appeared in the Regina Leader, and which has been reprinted by the Globe, respecting certain alleged land speculation by Mr. Dewdney in the Northwest, has traveled far and wide; and blames the Globe for having made mention of it as that of the person referred to by the Leader as 'living in Ottawa and wielding great influence,' who was said by that paper to have been interested with Mr. Dewdney. The Globe, it will be remembered, did not originate the charge against Lady Macdonald or anyone else, but merely mentioned her name as being that of the person hinted at by the Leader. But as our action has caused pain to her ladyship, we beg to express regret at having made mention of her name at all, to withdraw all that was suggested thereby, and to accept without hesitation the assurance that she was in no way concerned with that or any other transaction in the Northwest."

HORNING'S MILLS.

DEEPER BLUE.—We had very cold weather on the hilltops around the Mills last week, and the various roads leading to our village are badly drifted. However, the warm weather at present writing is having a soothing effect upon our inhabitants and business and activity are the order of the day.

LA GRIPPE.—A large number in the village and neighborhood are and have been suffering from the Russian epidemic. Boneset tea whisky, some hot butter-milk, some onions and other something else, but onions either raw or stewed, appear to be the best remedy.

DEFFERIN'S POST.—We were much pleased with your editorials in the last two issues of The Star. The Shelburne Economist suggested Horning's Mills as being a suitable site. Quite right, just the place and a more healthful locality cannot be found in the county.

FRATERNAL INSURANCE.—These organizations are being formed in rapid order in Melmer, Belanchon and the northern townships of Dufferin, and we think it is one of the best movements of the nineteenth century. Anything to bring down the monopolies will do.

OFFICERS ELECTED.—At the regular meeting of the C.O.F., No. 13 Council, the following officials were elected for 1892: Past Chief Ranger, Geo. H. Lyons; Chief Ranger, W. L. Roberts; Recorder, G. F. Atkinson; Assist. Recorder, L. C. Willier; Treasurer, J. Webster; Prelate, J. E. Kimrick; Marshall, M. Anderson; Warden, Chas. Sarkwell; Guard, C. A. Roderick; Sentry, E. J. Mustable; Representative to grand lodge, Geo. Lyons.

End, Worse, Worst.
Cold, cough, consumption, to cure the first and second and prevent the third use Kingsford's Pectoral Balsam, the never failing family medicine for all diseases of the throat, lungs and chest. A marvel of healing in pulmonary complaints.

willfully towards her. Then, as the tool grated on the sand she turned, and saw Sir Hilton Trowavess. He came towards her hurriedly, and as she rose, and would have sprung down from the rock, his hand seized hers, and held her. It was but the touch of a moment yet her heart beat, and her cheek crimsoned, while Sir Hilton grew pale to the lips.

"Do you hold out your hand to help me now?" said Olive, a little wistfully—"you would not touch me less than a year ago, even to say a last farewell."

"Be cruel to me if you will, Olive," he answered. "I long to hear reproaches from your lips. I wish you would speak bitterly to me; then I might have a hope."

Olive looked at him in the same wistful way; and, as her eyes half filled with tears, she turned her face from him.

"Always the same cold gentleness," he said in a despairing voice. "Oh for a touch of the old waywardness, a flash of the old passion! Shall I never, never see it back?"

"No," answered Olive, sadly; "it is gone forever. Sorrow has broken my spirit to the yoke. I shall never wak the world again with the fire of my tongue."

There was something in her tone that spoke of a broken heart, and Sir Hilton looked at her till his eyes grew dim.

"Olive," he said, pleadingly, "listen to me, I implore you. Do not send me away from you forever. Be my wife, and come with me to Italy for your health's sake. You are ill, you are weak, you seem to me the shadow of yourself."

His voice shook, and he held his hand towards her imploringly as she shrunk away from him against the rock.

"I cannot be your wife," she replied. "I am engaged to Charles Vigo. I have promised to be his wife. You heard the promise down yonder at the little inn—when you refused me your love."

"Pity me, Olive!" said Sir Hilton, passionately. "I was blind then. Is this your forgiveness, to remind me of that bitter time? Heavens! what right has this man to steal you from me?—to rob me of all I hold dear on earth?"

"You gave him the right," returned Olive, sorrowfully; "all that woman could say to man, I said to you that night. I did not turn to him, till all my prayers to you had failed me."

Sir Hilton hid his face in his hands; he could not answer her.

"And even then," continued Olive, more softly, "it was for John's sake I went. And shall I be so selfish now as to leave the man who helped me? Had I a right to make his name a byword, and heap the world's contempt on him, and then forsake him? No, he has suffered for me. I will be true to my promise to him."

"Suffered!" exclaimed Sir Hilton, catching at the word. "Is it because he has suffered for your sake that you will not desert him? Then you must not forsake me. I tell you it is I who have suffered—suffered horribly. And if we speak of sufferings, Olive, what right had you to suffer for me?—what right to load me with this burden of gratitude, of wonder, of love, and now thrust me away from your life, telling me I shall bear this burden forever, and you will take no payment—you will endure no return of love from me?"

"I cannot help it," said Olive, with a quivering voice; "I belong to Charles Vigo now. But do me justice, Hilton; own that I tried to spare you this pain. Remember how I pleaded with you that night, with what tears and anguish, and with what patience I bore your scorn."

"Olive, you madden me!" cried Sir Hilton. "Is it comforting to know that this misery is my own fault? And why not have said to me, then, 'I am innocent?'"

"You would not have believed me," replied Olive, "and to have explained the circumstances surrounding me would have been to denounce John. I thought it better to bear your hate than to see you dishonored; and to know the truth would have brought on you two terrible alternatives—cash, one a dishonor."

"You would not give me the choice of either," returned Sir Hilton, bitterly. "You let me act in ignorance—reject you in ignorance."

"Could I dare to give you such a choice?" asked Olive. "Could I put before you the alternative of being the denouncer of your own brother, or the coward who permitted a girl to take upon herself his guilt? It would have been a shame to help me to lie, knowing the truth."

"You are right, Olive," said Sir Hilton. "I should have been a coward, indeed, if I had kept your innocence catching at hope. "Then you do not mean to forsake me utterly?"

"I do not forsake you," she replied; "we shall always be friends, and Benvigo is near; we shall even be neighbors."

Olive said this with her eyes bent on the ground, and a faint color stealing into her cheeks. She had thought in saying it which Sir Hilton did not understand. He fancied it was said cruelly, with the intention to wound.

"Olive, you have grown bitter to me," he cried, angrily. "You insult me, when you offer me friendship and neighborly civility instead of your love. I will have neither. You might have spared me this last insult of neighborhood, Olive."

Olive glanced at him reproachfully, but he read her look wrong.

"Yes, I know," he said, "how I insulted you in the old time—I know I denied love and offered charity—I know that before your eyes I promised my hand to another woman, but I did not know that you could stoop to take revenge for all this."

"I revenged myself long ago," said Olive, softly. "There is no vengeance in my heart now."

"You revenged yourself," he answered, fiercely; "but how? By heaping benefits on me beneath which I writhe. You chose to bow your soul into the dust for me, and despised me while you did it."

"No, no," said Olive, gently. "I pitied—I—I loved you."

"Loved me," repeated Sir Hilton, bitterly, "and bound yours if to another man! I do not want such love as that, Olive; I ask your whole soul."

"I cannot give it," she said, steadily. "I have no right to love you now any more than you had to love me when you were bound to Eleanor Maristowe."

Sir Hilton's face paled as she spoke.

"Your words are just, Olive," he said, "though their sting is bitter. But I have a right to love you now; and you know, you have always known, that my love for that poor girl was as a pale icicle compared to my love for you. A moment ago you spoke of giving Charles Vigo your life, because he had suffered for you. You may hate me if you will, but you cannot prevent my doing this—you cannot prevent my choosing exile, and solitude, and sorrow, for your sake. Let the Trowavess die with me, and let the name perish, since Olive Varcoe will not ennoble it by mingling her blood with theirs."

There was a day when Olive had never thought to hear such words as these from Sir Hilton, but now she listened to them in mournful calmness.

"Do for me what you will," she said. "I cannot deny you the poor privilege of sorrowing for my sake. Now let me say farewell: the sky grows dark."

"It is all darkness for me now, and I go out into a dark world," said Sir Hilton. "Olive, your calmness maddens me! You speak to me as Eleanor Maristowe would, and not like Olive Varcoe."

"Leave me, I entreat you," returned Olive, sadly. "Do you know, that great happiness and great sorrow are alike calm? Eleanor's calm was the first, mine the last."

She gave him her hand as she spoke, and as he clasped it, his anguish and despair burst all bonds. The thought that when this hold relaxed, he should never grasp her hand again, made his heart quail.

"Olive, Olive," he cried, as he drew her towards him, "is my misery nothing to you? Will you give yourself to a man you do not love?"

"You try me too much," murmured Olive, reproachfully. "I have given my word to Charles Vigo. I belong to him. If he wishes me to be his wife, I shall marry him. I shall never be yours, unless given to you by his hand."

"And you say this to the man for whom you have nearly died!" cried Sir Hilton, desperately—"to me, for whose sake you endured in silence such agony and shame!"

"It was not such agony as you think," said Olive, honestly. "I had my innocence to uphold me, and the joy of knowing that I was suffering in your stead."

"Oh Olive, Olive! and I have lost you!" he cried; then his voice broke, and he stood silent, looking into her face with a sorrow fast growing into despair.

Olive strove to release her hand from his grasp.

"Let me go!" she said again, gently. But he did not heed her words.

"Olive you have heaped coals of fire on my head," he said, in a broken voice

she had done, it had seemed to her as natural and right to suffer for her great love's sake. But now, as Sir Hilton's reproachful tone fell on her ear, she blushed painfully, as the thought struck her, that if indeed his love had at last cast grown his pride, then he truly had no consolation for her loss, and her words must have appeared to him half cruel, half scornful.

"Oh, Hilton," she said, clinging to him with both hands now, "I did not mean to wound you. I did not say this to remind you that it was for your sake that I put my hand into Charles Vigo's. I thought to console you by——"

"By showing me," interrupted Sir Hilton, "that Olive Varcoe had saved for me my cold dead pride, in depriving me of her living loving self. I am fitly punished, Olive; say no more; it was my cruelty, my hardness, my blindness that forced you to throw yourself on Charles Vigo for the help as I the faith that I had not soul enough to give."

"Oh, Hilton, Hilton," murmured Olive, "I thought I was saving for you what you loved best. I thought that Olive Varcoe was nothing to you, compared to your name. And it was not till I had read John's letter, saying, that unless I accepted aid, he would place me in safety, and I saw there was no way left to save you and him but by escaping—it was not till then that I went for Charles Vigo. Though you hated me, though you scorned me, though your cruel thoughts of me made me shudder, I would have kept my love for you if I could. It was for your sake I tore it out of my heart at last, for your sake I flung it away, and would not let it stay me in the path I had chosen. Oh, do tell me now that I did wrong, and you would rather have kept me than saved your brother!"

Sir Hilton could not tell her this, and he was ashamed to say that he wanted both. He could not reconcile himself to the fact that he had lost Olive; he could not believe it, he writhed under the thought. She had been his; he knew now that he had never intended to part with her, and like a man, looking into some fearful pit, he recoiled from the void of his own life, deprived of her. Yet, remembering all that Olive's great love had spared him, he grew calmer, and in his heart he felt that Charles Vigo was more worthy of her than he. Humbled, softened by this thought, he spoke less selfishly.

"Do not not grieve, Olive," he said; "you did well; you have always done well. Mine was the sin; mine be the punishment, mine the loss. You are taken from my life for ever; and my honor and my name are left to me in cold pride, in famine of the heart, and in loneliness. Henceforth I am a solitary man. I will never seek to love or to be loved. Olive, you have pledged your troth to a noble and good man, who succored you in time of need. Bitter as it is to me to say it, I know it would be ignoble in you to desert him now, especially for a man so infinitely beneath him in true nobility as I am;—a man, Olive, who basely forsook you, and unable to comprehend your nobleness, dared in his poor, mean thoughts to stain your innocence with the crime committed by one of his own blood."

Olive was weeping, but she put her hand upon his lips to stay his words, but he caught it, and pressed it there, kissing it many times.

"I am glad," said Olive, faltering, "that you can at last see my duty as I do. I have pledged my faith to Charles Vigo for ever. I will not turn even one lingering look to the past. My life is his to dispose of as he will. He merits this from me, and more."

Then rousing herself from her feebleness, she drew back from Sir Hilton's clasp, and covering her eyes with her hand, she entreated him to leave her.

In the fierceness and misery of his love, Sir Hilton longed to touch her lips, and he bent towards her, half hoping she would yield him this last caress.

"Olive," he said in a trembling voice, "you ones asked me for a kiss that I would not give; and then we parted, as I thought for ever. Now we part again, but not in anger, and you will not, I hope, refuse me this last sign of your forgiveness."

Olive was silent, but she turned away from his gaze, and waved her hand in farewell.

At that moment he thought of her as he had seen her at the little inn, kneeling at his feet, imploring him for a word, a look of kindness, and his soul sank, and the desire to hold her only for an instant to his heart came upon him fiercely like a fever.

"Olive, you cannot, you shall not re

And saying this, she bent her face upon the rocks, and wept bitterly.

A DETROIT MIRACLE.

A GREAT TRIUMPH FOR CANADIAN MEDICAL SCIENCE.

Particulars of One of the Most Remarkable Cures on Record Described by the Detroit News—A Story Worth a Careful Perusal.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 29th, 1892.—A case this just come to light here, the particulars of which were published in the Evening News, which will be read with considerable interest by all Canadians, as it records the remarkable achievement of a Canadian medical discovery, which has already, in its own country, won great and enduring fame. At the added triumph there is no doubt the fellow countrymen of the proprietors will rejoice, as it sheds lustre on Canadian science. The story is told by the News as follows:—

The following paragraph which appeared in the News a short time ago, furnished the basis of this information—a case that was so wonderfully remarkable that it demanded further explanation. It is of sufficient importance to the News' readers to report it to them fully. It was so important then that it attracted considerable attention at the time. The following is the paragraph in question:—

"C. B. Northrop, for 28 years one of the best known merchants on Woodward avenue, who was supposed to be dying last spring of locomotor ataxia, or creeping paralysis, has secured a new lease of life and returned to work at his store. The disease has always been supposed to be incurable, but Mr. Northrop's condition is greatly improved, and it looks now as if the grave would be cheated of its prey."

Since that time Mr. Northrop has steadily improved, not only in looks, but in condition, till he has regained his old-time strength.

It had been hinted to the writer of this article, who was acquainted with Mr. Northrop, that this miraculous change had been wrought by a very simple remedy called Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. When asked about it Mr. Northrop fully verified the statement, and not only so, but he had taken pains to inform any one who was suffering in a similar manner when he heard of any such case. Mr Northrop was enthusiastic at the result in his own case of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. It was a remedy that he had heard of after he had tried everything he could hope to give him relief. He had been in the care of the best physicians who did all they could to alleviate this terrible malady, but without any avail. He had given up hope, when a friend in Lockport, N. Y., wrote him of the case of a person there who had been cured in similar circumstances by Dr Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. The person cured at Lockport had obtained his information respecting Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from an article in the Hamilton, Ont., Times. The case was called "The Hamilton Miracle" and told the story of a man in that city who, after almost incredible suffering, was pronounced by the most eminent physicians to be incurable and permanently disabled. He had spent hundreds of dollars in all sorts of treatment and appliances only to be told in the end that there was no hope for him, and that cure was impossible. The person alluded to (Mr. John Marshall, of 25 Little William St., Hamilton, Ont.,) was a member of the Royal Templars of Temperance, and after having been pronounced permanently disabled and incurable by the physicians, was paid the $1,000 disability insurance provided by the order for its members in such cases, for years Mr Marshall had been utterly helpless, and was barely able to drag himself around his house with the aid of crutches. His agonies were almost unbearable and life was a burden to him, when at last relief came. Some months after he had been paid the disability claim he heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and was induced to try them. The result was miraculous; almost from the outset an improvement was noticed and in a few months the man whom medical experts had said was incurable, was going about the city healthier and stronger than before. Mr. Marshall was so well known in Hamilton that all the city newspapers wrote up his wonderful recovery in detail, and it was thus as before stated, that Mr. Northrop came into possession of the information that led to his equally marvelous recovery. One could scarcely conceive a case more hopeless than that of Mr. Northrop. His injury came about in this way: One day nearly four years ago, he stumbled and fell the complete length of a steep flight of stairs which were at the rear of his store. His head and spine were severely injured. He was picked up and taken to his home. Creeping paralysis very soon developed itself, and in spite of the most strenuous efforts of friends and physicians the terrible affliction fastened itself upon him. For nearly two years he was perfectly helpless. He could do nothing to support his strength in the least effort. He had to be wheeled about in an invalid's chair. He was weak, pale and fast sinking when his timely information came that veritably snatched his life from the jaws of death. Those, who at that time saw a feeble old man wheeled into his store on an invalid's chair, would not recognize the man now, so great is the change that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have wrought. When Mr. Northrop learned of the remedy that had cured Mr. Marshall in Hamilton, and the person in Lockport, he procured a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through of Detroit, and he says he is only too glad to testify of the marvelous good wrought in his case. He says he considers it his duty to help all who are similarly afflicted by any good he can say in behalf of the wonderful efficacy of Dr. Williams' pink Pills. If any of the News readers want any further information, we feel sure Mr. Northrop would willingly oblige them, as he has the writer in relating these facts to him.

LADY MACDONALD.

A spirited and Touching Letter to the New York Tribune.

The following letter from the Baroness Macdonald appears in the New York Tribune:—

SIR,—I have before me the issue of your valuable journal dated Friday, January 8, 1892. This issue contains two paragraphs quoted from the Globe newspaper of Toronto, Canada, which paragraphs make a specific, deliberate and most damaging accusation against me.

In these paragraphs it is declared that I am the personage referred to by another journal (the Regina Leader), published in the Northwest territories of Canada, as one of the several individuals who, in the year 1882, engaged in a shady and disreputable transaction," for "the purchase of land near the present site of the Regina capital on speculation." At that date my late husband, Sir John Macdonald, was first minister in Canada.

I know I shall not appeal in vain when I here pray, as an act of mercy on the living as well as one of solemn justice to the dead, that you will cause to be published in the New York Tribune this, my distinct, positive and absolute unqualified denial of that baseless and most cruel charge, a charge, indeed, so entirely destitute of even the shadow of a foundation that my troubled mind is almost as much filled with amazement as my sore and stricken heart is torn by its appearance with a new grief and pain.

I beg to remain, sir, your obliged and faithful

AGNES MACDONALD OF REKNEDDYN,

Lakewood, N. J., January 9, 1892.

Commenting on the above the Tribune, editorially, says: "We accept Lady Macdonald's denial as conclusive, and regret that we helped to circulate a baseless accusation."

The Toronto Mail, referring to the matter, adds: "It is too bad that in the heat and insanity of Canadian politics it was thought desirable to strike at a widow that the party might profit."

ANOTHER APOLOGY.

The Globe of the 17th contained the following further reference to the matter:—"Lady Macdonald and that the connection of her name with the article which has appeared in the Regina Leader, and which has been reprinted by the Globe, respecting certain alleged land speculation by Mr. Dewdney in the Northwest, has traveled far and wide; and blames the Globe for having made mention of it as that of the person referred to by the Leader as 'living in Ottawa and wielding great influence,' who was said by that paper to have been interested with Mr. Rowdney. The Globe, it will be remembered, did not originate the charge against Lady Macdonald or anyone else, but merely mentioned her name as being that of the person hinted at by the Leader. But as our action has caused pain to her ladyship, we beg to express regret at having made mention of her name at all, to withdraw all that was suggested thereby, and to accept without hesitation the assurance that she was in no way concerned with that or any other transaction in the Northwest."

HORNING'S MILLS.

DRIFTED ROADS.—We had very cold weather on the hilltops around the Mills last week, and the various roads leading to our village are badly drifted. However, the warm weather at present writing is having a soothing effect upon our inhabitants and business and activity are the order of the day.

LA GRIPPE.—A large number in the village and neighborhood are and have been suffering from the Russian epidemic. Some use whiskey, some hot butter-milk, some onions and other something else, but onions either raw or stewed, appear to be the best remedy.

DUFFERIN'S POOP.—We were much pleased with your editorials in the last two issues of THE SUN. The Shelburne Economist suggested Horning's Mills as being a suitable site. Quite right, just the place and a more healthful locality cannot be found in the county.

PATRONS OF INDUSTRY.—These organizations are being formed in rapid order in Melmur, Melancthon and the northern townships of Dufferin, and we think it is one of the best movements of the nineteenth century. Anything to bring down the monopolies will do.

ORGANIC ELECTION.—At the regular meeting of the C. O. C. F., No. 17 Council, the following officials were elected for 1892: Past Councillor, Geo. H. Lyons; Councillor, W. L. Roberts; Recorder, G. F. Atkinson; Asst.-Recorder, J. C. Wilder; Treasurer, J. Webster; Prelate, J. E. Emerick; Marshall, M. Anderson; Warden, Chas. Sarkwell; Guard, G. A. Redrick; Sentry, E. J. Hunstable; Representative to grand lodge, Geo. Lyons.

The Sun

IT SHINES FOR ALL.

ORANGEVILLE, FEB. 11, 1892.

OUR POSITION.

THERE has lately been some talk about starting another "Conservative" paper in Orangeville, but those who are supposed to be at the head of the movement deny that there is any truth in the report. THE SUN has been selling in the Conservative boat ever since this journal commenced publication, nearly thirty-two years ago, and, of course, weathered many storms. So long as the present management controls THE SUN's columns and so long as we believe the Conservative policy is the right and best policy for the country, we will be found in the front ranks battling for the Conservative cause. Of course there are over zealous men in every party and if their leading paper does not become red hot when they think it should (and throw in puffs at our own expense) those humid politicians start a organ of their own. That's how the present Grit Advertiser came into the world. It was started as a Conservative paper, but a few weeks afterwards it deserted and slapped the conservatives, who furnished the money to float the enterprise, in the face. It has been on the tumble ever since.

Another Conservative hack, called the Gazette, was launched in opposition to THE SUN, but after a comparatively short and stormy career gave up the ghost. Then our esteemed contemporary, the Post, was brought out to "do us for sure," but we're still in the ring and are growing stronger every day instead of weaker. The other local papers have changed proprietorship scores of times.

A MEETING was held at Devonshire house on Monday night when a message to Lord Hartington, now Duke of Devonshire, as Liberal Unionist in the House of Commons. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, M. P. for Birmingham, who has long been talked of as the successor of Lord Hartington as Parliamentary leader, was formally elected to the position. Mr. Chamberlain, in a speech, said the Duke of Devonshire would still direct the policy of the party. He maintained his position was that of a Liberal. All the opinions he had expressed throughout the fight for the maintenance of the Union he still adhered to.

THE capture of Soulanges and Lennox gives the government an addition by three votes to its strength on a division, and this in spite of the fact that Richelieu was lost. Richelieu was represented last session by Sir Hector Langevin, who sat for a second constituency. It therefore had no voice in the commons. When the Liberals took the county they gained one, and the Conservative figures were not reduced. Soulanges and Lennox deprive the opposition of two votes, and add two to the ministerial side. There is therefore a gain of four for the government, minus the gain of one in Richelieu by the opposition. Thus the ministerialists are three better off than they were.

THURSDAY was a dreary day for the Liberals. In Ontario, Prince Edward and Lennox were carried by the Conservatives; in New Brunswick, the Liberal usurper of Queen's county was deposed by the supreme court, and the seat given to Mr. Baird, the Conservative candidate; in Quebec, the Liberal representative of Pontiac was unseated for corruption. In this latter constituency, Mr. Murray was elected by a small plurality over two Conservatives. He

DIVISION COURT.

Only Two Important Cases in Tuesday's Sitting—Two Juryman Fined.

His honor Judge McCarthy held division court in the court house here on Tuesday. The docket was light, there being but two cases of any importance, those of McMaster vs. Thompson and Sargent vs. Walker, both of which cases were tried by jury.

ABOUT A SELF BINDER.

Mr. J. A. McMaster sued Wm. Thompson of Georgetown for the sum of $50, being the first instalment due on a selfbinding reaper, which plaintiff's agent had sold defendant. From the evidence it appears the machine did not give satisfaction as guaranteed, and the agent who delivered the implement not being a practical mechanic was unable to remedy the defect, which was trifling. The agent promised to send an experienced man from the McMaster works to put the machine in running order, but he neglected to notify Mr. McMaster and as a result the defendant was obliged to make other arrangements to take off his crops. Under the circumstances the jury held that there was a breach of contract and brought in a verdict for the defendant. Mr. Thompson, on hearing the evidence, was satisfied that Mr. McMaster was not at fault, and being much taken with the principle upon which the machine is constructed, ordered a new one from the McMaster Manufacturing Co., to be delivered before next harvest.

IT WASN'T HOYEL.

In the case of Sargent vs. Walker the plaintiff, who represents himself as a farmer from the township of Holland, sought to recover from Schoolteacher Walker of Camilla the sum of $130, the amount of a promissory note given for

Mr. J. S. McGuire of Greenhurst gave THE SUN a pleasant call on Wednesday of last week.

Mr. T. E. Reid of Toronto University who has been visiting his parents here, returned to the city last week.

District Deputy Master Workman J. F. McLaughlin of Owen Sound paid the local A. O. U. W. lodge a fraternal visit on Monday evening.

Mr. A Hubbard, who has been attending the Orangeville high school, has secured a situation as teacher in a school near Bowling Green.

Our old friend, Mr. Simon Trimble of Laurel, dropped in to see us last week and renewed his subscription to THE SUN for the thirty second time.

Miss Kate McKim of Guelph, formerly of the registry office here, left last week for Denver, Col., where her sister, Mrs. W. F. Robinson, lies seriously ill.

Miss Jennie McMillan of the G.N.W.T. office returned home on Monday after paying a pleasant two weeks' visit to friends at Orpington, Hillsburg and other places.

Yesterday Mr. and Mrs. H. Savage were called to Oakville on a melancholy errand, namely, to attend the funeral of his sister, Miss Mary Savage, who died on Tuesday night of inflammation of the lungs.

CAMILLA.

GOOD.—Mr. Joe Hennty & Liberty Leslie has gone and left us, and the last we hear of him he was selling tees in Orangeville for a Toronto nursery firm.

PLEASANT PARTY.—On Friday night a very pleasant party took place at the residence of Mr. Wm. Lundy. Dancing and other amusements were indulged in and the guests spent a very enjoyable time.

THE PATRONS.—The Patrons of Industry are increasing around here, and it is said they intend to start a store or get their supplies at an Orangeville agency. What's the matter with our popular young merchant, E. J. Cobean, supplying their wants? He could do it just as well as any other man who inhabits this mundane sphere.

GRIP.—The grip is not letting up its grip around here, and Camillites are still in the grip of the grip....Mr. P. Forsyth, who has been on the sick list for a long time, is slowly recovering....Mr. W. J. Morrison, our respected innkeeper, is running a good house and well earns the support which he receives.....Mr. James Kyles was in Toronto for three or four days last week....A good deal of teaming is done on our roads, which are in excellent shape.

CHEESE FACTORY.—Messrs. Fleming & Howard of Hastings have completed all arrangements for establishing a cheese factory here and when the flowers bloom in the spring a good building will be erected and furnished with every detail for turning out any quantity of first class Canadian cheese. The patron list was a little slow about filling up, but now a sufficient number has been obtained and another industry will be established at Camilla. I am sure THE SUN will wish these enterprising gentlemen well.

The Sun
IS ENTERED FOR 1892.
ORANGEVILLE, FEB. 11, 1892.

OUR POSITION.

THERE has lately been some talk about starting another "Conservative" paper in Orangeville, but those who are supposed to be at the head of the movement deny that there is any truth in the report. THE SUN has been selling in the Conservative host ever since this journal commenced publication, nearly thirty-two years ago, and, of course, weathered many storms. So long as the present management controls THE SUN's columns and so long as we believe the Conservative policy is the right and best policy for the country, we will be found in the front ranks battling for the Conservative cause. Of course there are over zealous men in every party and if their leading paper does not become red hot when they think it should (and throw in puffs at our own expense) those hasty politicians are talking about starting an organ of their own. That's how the present Grit Advertiser came into the world. It was started as a Conservative paper, but a few weeks afterwards it deserted and slapped the conservatives, who furnished the money to float the enterprise, in the face. It has been on the tumble ever since.

Another Conservative hack, called the Gazette, was launched in opposition to THE SUN, but after a comparatively short and stormy career gave up the ghost. Then our esteemed contemporary, the Post, was brought out to "do as far as are," but we're still in the ring and are growing stronger every day instead of weaker. The other local papers have changed proprietorship scores of times, but THE SUN is under practically the same management as it was thirty two years ago, never having changed hands.

Why is this? Simply because THE SUN enlisted the confidence of the people and it has retained that confidence by an honest effort to earn an honest living. The late editor of this journal might have become wealthy had he not placed honor and trust before bribery and deception, but, thank God, he valued character higher than money. THE SUN of to day is exactly the same in that respect as THE SUN of years gone by, and it will continue in the same path as long as the present management controls the paper.

THE SUN is not afraid of opposition, and we sincerely hope it never will be. This is not said in the form of a boast—we never do anything like that. But if there's anything in the rumor about the new paper the promoters of the scheme would do well to profit by the disastrous experience of those who have tried and failed.

THE REPULSE EXPLAINED.

Commenting on the result of Thursday's by elections, the Globe says:

"It is useless to deny that these results are exceedingly disappointing to the Liberals. It is true that in by-elections in Canada there is an advantage in favor of the Government of the day; but in Lennox and Prince Edward the Liberals had reason to believe that this advantage would not prevail." * * * "Liberals had better acknowledge the defeat frankly, without seeking excuses for it, and go into the remaining contests with increased energy and determination."

This candor is commendable. The admission that should accompany it is, that Liberals are suffering because they are following a blind lead. They are turning all their affections and hopes and efforts towards the United States, whereas they should recognize the tariff hostility of that country and join with Conservatives in taking advantage of our great opportunities in the British market.

It is the worst form of folly to talk about the United States being our natural and only market, while our exports of farm produce to Great Britain are increasing by millions every year, and stood last year at $26,500,000 as against $11,000,000 worth to the United States. Why, for the first six months of the current fiscal year there was an increase of over $10,000,000 in the value of farm products sent from Canada to Great Britain.

In other words, the increase within that short period almost equal the entire sales which our farmers made to the United States for the whole of last year. The United States has been a falling market for twenty years, whereas Great Britain, within that period, has increased her purchases of farm products from Canada seven fold! It is the realization of this great truth by Canadian farmers which has at the bottom of the Liberal repulse all along the line.

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE anti Parnellites have re elected Justin McCarthy chairman of their section of the Irish parliamentary party.

TO DAY'S elections will add a few more members to Premier Abbott's already handsome majority in the House.

WRITS for the Vaudreuil and Two Mountains elections for the commons were issued on Monday. The polling days are Feb 22 and Feb. 29 respectively.

MONDAY'S papers published a letter from James G Blaine, secretary of state for the United States, to the effect that he would not be a candidate for the presidency. It looks as if Harrison will have a second term.

ELECTIONS of members of Parliament are taking place to day in Peel, East Bruce, East Middlesex, North and South Victoria and Halifax, N. S. The increasing Conservative majority will be further increased after to day.

AT the nominations of candidates for Peel, held in Brampton last Thursday, Hon. G. E. Foster, Minister of Finance, wiped the floor, metaphorically speaking, with the body of that false prophet, Sir Richard Cartwright. It is safe to predict that Mr. Jackson will be returned by a long majority to day.

SEVERAL days ago Hon. Alex Mackenzie met with a painful accident at Toronto. The aged ex Premier of Canada fell on the street and injured his thigh, and for some time the doctors had little hope of his recovery. The latest dispatches, however, bring the cheerful news that the hon. gentleman is getting around again. We are sure that every true-hearted Conservative, as well as Reformer, wish the ex premier a speedy recovery, and so does THE SUN.

A MEETING was held at Devonshire house on Monday when a message to Lord Hartington, now Duke of Devonshire, as Liberal Unionist in the House of Commons. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, M. P. for Birmingham, who has long been talked of as the successor of Lord Hartington as Parliamentary leader, was formally elected to the position. Mr. Chamberlain, in a speech, said the Duke of Devonshire would still direct the policy of the party. He maintained his position was that of a Liberal. All the epithets he had expressed throughout the fight for the maintenance of the Union he still adhered to.

THE capture of Soulanges and Lennox gives the government an addition by three votes to its strength on a division, and this in spite of the fact that Richelieu was lost. Richelieu was represented last session by Sir Hector Langevin, who sat for a second constituency. It therefore had no voice in the commons. When the Liberals took the county they gained one, and the Conservative figures were not reduced. Soulanges and Lennox deprive the opposition of two votes, and add two to the ministerial side. There is therefore a gain of four for the government, minus the gain of one in Richelieu by the opposition. Thus the ministerialists are three better off than they were.

THURSDAY was a dreary day for the Liberals. In Ontario, Prince Edward and Lennox were carried by the Conservatives; in New Brunswick, the Liberal usurper of Queen's county was deposed by the supreme court, and the seat given to Mr. Baird, the Conservative candidate; in Quebec, the Liberal representative of Pontiac was unseated for corruption. In this latter constituency, Mr. Murray was elected by a small plurality over two Conservatives. He has appealed to the supreme court for the purpose of holding his seat during the approaching session; but it may be safely assumed that his career at Ottawa is virtually at an end. Pontiac is really a Conservative stronghold; so much so, that two Conservatives were tempted to oppose one Liberal in the last campaign. That will not occur again.

GLOOM IN GUELPH.

Extraordinary Demonstration at Mayor Goldie's Funeral.

Ten thousand people stood in the streets of Guelph on Saturday, and the sad gale day will long be remembered in the annals of Western Ontario. Mayor Goldie's death seemed to have provoked a great public upheaval of genuine sorrow, and although there was a commendable absence of any funeral panoply, the people were none the less sincere in their demonstrations of regret at the premature removal of their friend and civic chief. It is not every day that a mayor turns his face to the wall while in harness, but such was the fate that befel gentle Thomas Goldie. The deadly grip first prostrated him, and then an attack of pneumonia carried his spirit away almost before the family realized the fatal danger. Never was there such a scene witnessed in Guelph. Everybody turned out for miles around to pay the last mark of respect to the dead Chief Magistrate. It was a day which carries its recollections through a lifetime.

After a brief funeral service at the family mansion in the morning, the remains were taken to the City Hall, which was heavily draped in black, and laid in state in the Council Chamber. From before noon until three in the afternoon there was a ceaseless but orderly stream of visitors pouring through the civic headquarters to take a last fond look at the features lying cold in the embrace of death. The arrangements were excellent, and left nothing to be desired. Through the enterprise of Mr. O. H. Bosworth and Mr. John Earls, special trains were run out of Toronto by the C. P. R. and Grand Trunk. President Hugh Baird headed a big contingent from the Toronto Board of Trade, while the Albany Club, the Dominion Millers Association, the Ontario Cricket Club and other organizations with which the deceased was identified also sent representatives. Upwards of three hundred sleighs followed the hearse to the church and cemetery, and all business in the busy little city of Guelph was absolutely suspended. Not a shop remained open. The demonstration altogether was pathetic in the extreme.

SLESWICK.

IMPROVING.—Mr. Alex. Speers, who has been seriously ill for some time past, is, we are glad to state, improving and will be able to be out before many days.

BRIEFS.—A good number of residents are complaining about the evil results of la grippe, which held away around here for several weeks. It is declining, however, and nobody is sorry.....The public school is making good progress under the superintendance of Miss Ryan, who has occupied the position of teacher for the past three years.

THAT QUARRY.—Now that spring is coming we may expect a great increase in our population when the famous and much talked of quarry opens out for business. If the quarries open the Sleswick branch of the railway will also be built, and then things will boom. We would not be very much surprised to see the above ventures carried into completion.

GOING TO THE NORTHWEST.—We are sorry that Mr. Thos. Richardson has decided to remove from our midst. We believe it is his intention to settle in the great Canadian Northwest. Tom is what is commonly known as a "good lead" and was very popular in the neighborhood, and we wish him the greatest success wherever he goes. All live stock, implements, etc., will be sold by public auction on Monday, the 15th.

BECOMING A NUISANCE.—Surprise parties and dances are becoming an intolerable nuisance in this section of the country. So great has been the events lately that a number of fathers and mothers are up in arms against the practice of their sons and daughters dancing themselves as fast as they can into the other world. Every night there is one or more dances, and no wonder the parents are kicking. As the old fiddlers drop out new ones take their place, and three young aspirants, who have become possessed of a new fiddle, can be heard practicing when they have a minute to spare. Dancing in moderation is all right, but when it is carried to excess it's high time to call a halt. We hope this item will bear good fruit and bring some of the boys to their senses.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—These world-renowned remedies are confidently recommended to miners, navvies, and all who have to work underground, or where noxious atmospheres exist. The minute particles of coal or metal which permeate the air in such places tend to block up the lungs and air-tubes, giving rise to bronchitis, asthma and palpitation of the heart. In Holloway's remedies will be found a safe and costly cure. Moreover, for the penetrating properties of the Ointment relieve the local congestion and the mildly laxative effects of the Pills cause the liver to act freely, and the breath to become unembarrassed. By early resort to these remedies many a serious illness may be averted, and soundness of health maintained.

DIVISION COURT.

Only Two Important Cases in Tuesday's Session—The Jurymen Fined.

His honor Judge McCarthy held division court in the court house here on Tuesday. The docket was light, there being but two cases of any importance, those of McMaster vs. Thompson and Sargent vs. Walker, both of which cases were tried by jury.

ABOUT A SELF BINDER.

Mr. J. S. McMaster sued Wm. Thompson of Georgetown for the sum of $50, being the first instalment due on a selfbinding reaper, which plaintiff's agent had sold defendant. From the evidence it appears the machine did not give satisfaction as guaranteed, and the agent who delivered the implement not being a practical mechanic was unable to remedy the defect, which was trifling. The agent promised to send an experienced man from the McMaster works to put the machine in running order, but he neglected to notify Mr. McMaster and as a result the defendant was obliged to make other arrangements to take off his crops. Under the circumstances the jury held that there was a breach of contract and brought in a verdict for the defendant. Mr. Thompson, on hearing the evidence, was satisfied that Mr. McMaster was not at fault, and being much taken with the principle upon which the machine is constructed, ordered a new one from the McMaster Manufacturing Co, to be delivered before next harvest.

IT WASN'T NOVEL.

In the case of Sargent vs. Walker the plaintiff, who represents himself as a farmer from the township of Holland, sought to recover from Schoolteacher Walker of Camilla the sum of $130, the amount of a promissory note given for two township rights to use the "Sargent spring board hay-lifter." The defendant urged as a defence that there was no novelty in the patent and it was, therefore, void; consequently there was no consideration for the note. Defendant had copies of specifications and plans from the patent office and two working models of the concern. He presented his defence at great length and completeness to the jury, and after elaborate quotations of cases in the supreme and provincial courts and lengthy addresses by the counsels the judge charged the jury on the various points of law and evidence relating to the case. The jury retired and after a few minutes' deliberation returned with a verdict for the defendant. Mr. Lucas, a young Markdale lawyer, appeared for the plaintiff, and from his management of the case (his first jury case) we bespeak for him a successful future in his profession. Crown-Attorney Myers appeared for the defendant.

JURYMEN FINED.

A circumstance of which jurors had better take notice happened at the close of the court. George Brown and George Bidwell, who were summoned as jurors, put in an appearance for their pay and immediately left the building. When their names were called out neither of them could be found and for their contumacy his honor fined them $1 each, which sums the clerk was instructed to see duly collected. This is, we believe, the first time in the history of the county that dilatory jurymen have been fined, and we trust occasion will not arise for further warning.

RELESSEY.

THE FELL DESTROYER.—The dark angel is ever busy around here and every day we have examples of his ceaseless work. On Tuesday the 2nd, Mr. Andrew Coleman, a well-known and highly respected resident of this township, passed into the spirit land. He was a young man of 32 and possessed many admirable qualities. Over a year ago Mr. Coleman was attacked with inflammation of the lungs, which developed into la grippe and which finally resulted in his death. Deceased was married to a daughter of Mr. James Anderson, but they had no children. The funeral took place on Thursday to the Relessey burying ground and over one hundred vehicles were in the procession. Mrs. Coleman has the sympathy of the community in her sad bereavement.

BOWLING GREEN.

ENTERPRISING.—Councillor Driver is going to build a new residence next spring. Contractor Geo. Rounding has been awarded the contract.

FAVORABLE PROGRESS.—Our debating society is making favorable progress. At the last meeting Messrs. Driver and Rounding were the captains the former winning by a few points. I tell you he feels pretty big now.

YE EDITOR INVITED.—There is going to be a tea meeting held here on Tuesday, the 16th, in aid of the organ fund of the Church of the Good Shepherd. It promises to be a great event, and we cordially extend an invitation to you and your friends, Mr. Editor. We would like to see you up this way.

ENGAGED.—The B. G. choir filled an engagement at an Orange soiree at Waldemar on Wednesday night. The choir, which is beginning to be recognized as an excellent combination, will sing here on Tuesday evening, the 16th. I guess Bowling Green will not have to import any more artists.

WOOD BEE AND DANCE.—Mr. Alex. Hughston had a big wood bee and dance on Monday, which was very largely attended. The boys worked with a will all afternoon and at night they secured partners and tripped the light fantastic toe till the wee sma' 'oors. It is needless to say that all those who participated in the festivities were well pleased. Who else has wood to cut?

LITTLE LOCALS.—Albert Dodds has been engaged for a year by John Fife. Ab. can't go far away from the Green.....The terrible grip is having things all its own way in Bowling Green and vicinity.....Mrs. J. Bates has moved into the village and she and the children say they like the retired life in town.....John A. Simpson has taken possession of the farm owned and lately occupied by Mrs. Bates.

Easily Caught.

CROUP, colds, sore throat and many painful ailments are easily caught in this changeable climate. The never-failing remedy is just as easily obtained in Hagyard's Yellow Oil, which is undoubtedly the best of all the many remedies offered for the cure of colds or pains.

Burglars entered the Delhi post office last week and stole $60.

A General Overcome.

DEAR SIRS,—I suffered from general weakness and debility and my system was completely run down and I found B. B. B. the best medicine I ever tried. I would not be without it for a great deal.

CARDWELL.

GET READY FOR IT.—The event in society circles this season will undoubtedly be the "at home" to be given by Mr. Edward Jenkins shortly. It is supposed that it will surpass all other functions this season and the young people are on the qui vive with expectancy.

AT HOME.—On Thursday last Mrs. William Jackson was "at home" to a few good friends, amongst whom were Mrs. Bracken, Mrs. Jenkins, Mrs. Lester of Orangeville, Mrs. R. Jackson, jr., Mrs. R. Jackson, sr. The object of interest to all was an excellent quilt which was stitched in artistic style by the willing workers. Five o'clock tea was dispensed and a most delightful time spent by the very select group of dear old ladies.

SURPRISE PARTY.—There was a jovial surprise party of about 76 persons, including Cardwellites, who congregated by invitation at the residence of Mr. Joseph Leighton on Friday night of last week. Many of the party drove from the vicinity of Mono Mills and Hockley. The gay throng was generously entertained and dancing and other amusements were indulged in until the following morning. Messrs. Lee, Perry, Babe and T. Huston of Toronto furnished the music.

A PLEASANT EVENT.—A most enjoyable dance and tea took place on Thursday evening of last week at the residence of Mr. John Leighton. Bright rooms tastefully decorated and some very pleasing costumes made up an attractive scene for a few hours. Mrs. Leighton was assisted in receiving her guests by Misses Mary and Margret Leighton, the latter looking very handsome in garnet silk trimmed exquisitely. Music was furnished by Messrs. W. J. Reid and J. Leighton and M. Leighton, which added to the enjoyment of the occasion.

DODGERS.—Messrs. Clark and Eastman lectured to large crowds in west Mono mission last Sunday.....Grip still holds its own in this locality.....Hot weather in spring will come seriatim to tone up the system of many a weary sufferer. Therapeutics in many cases are worse than useless.....Rev. F. Burt still lies in a serious condition.....Mr. James McDonald of your town has bargained to build the Cardwell school house.....Preparations are in progress toward building a dwelling house on lot 10 centre road east, Mono. IDEAS.

Who will be the Mrs. of my palatial residence is a problem which is troubling the blessed heads of the ladies of Cardwell, Sand Hill and Tullamore.—Joseph.

I gosh Joe, why didn't you get me to tie you to the 250 pounder of Tullamore; she'd be the stuff for the cold weather.—George Benjamin.

To relieve the monotony of a student's life and to cheer me up in my loneliness they might have invited me.—Frederick

The big headed editor has my name in the Post again; he he's at me about eating herrings; I wonder if Hossack's sermons made any impression on him.—Thomas.

I can demonstrate by experience that keeping back is immense.—First-line Joseph.

Boys, I be lonesome on the blind line, I wish I had a help mate.—Michael.

Did you come? Oh, you never could forget it if you came, for the girls were frisky (lively) and the boys were happy and the fiddle and the piano went rum tum tum; with teasing and coaxing and squeezing, free for all and courting in the parlor and upstairs too at Johnny Leighton's ball.—The Boys.

Indeed we are growing too fond of parties, we should strive and do better in the future.—The Girls.

They are getting wild attending dances; I don't know what they are going to turn to.—Robert.

The Cardwell ladies are the girls for us.—Mono Mills Boys.

Five to One.

DEAR SIRS,—Last winter I had five large boils on my neck and was advised to use B. B. B. Before I had finished the first bottle I was completely well and think B. B. B. cannot be excelled as a blood purifier.
JOHN WOOD, Round Plains, Ont.

People who use arsenical preparations for their complexion, do so at the risk of their lives. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is guaranteed free from any injurious drug, and is, therefore, the safest as well as the most powerful blood medicine in the world. It makes the white clear.

CAMILLA.

GONE.—Mr. Jno. Heaney & Liberty Lewis have gone and left us, and the last we heard of him he was selling brass in Orangeville for a Toronto nursery firm.

PLEASANT PARTY.—On Friday night a very pleasant party took place at the residence of Mr. Wm. Leady. Dancing and other amusements were indulged in and the guests spent a very enjoyable time.

THE PATRONS.—The Patrons of Industry are increasing around here, and it would they intend to start a store or get their supplies at an Orangeville agency. What's the matter with our popular young merchant, E. J. Coleman, supplying their wants? He could do it just as well as any other man who inhabits this mundane sphere.

GRIPPE.—The grip is not letting up its grip around here, and Camillites are still in the grip of the grip....Mr. P. Forsyth, who has been on the sick list for a long time, is slowly recovering....Mr. W. J. CHEESE FACTORY.—Messrs. Fleming & Howard of Hastings have completed all arrangements for establishing a cheese factory here and when the flowers bloom in the spring a good building will be erected and furnished with every detail for turning out any quantity of first-class Canadian cheese. The patron list was a little slow about filling up, but now a sufficient number has been obtained and another industry will be established at Camilla. I am sure THE SUN will wish these enterprising gentlemen well.

"LIBERTY OR DEATH."

Fitzsimmons, the Brockville Murderer, Cut His Throat in Jail.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 4.—Frederick C. Fitzsimmons of Brockville, Ont., who was arrested here Tuesday charged with murder in Pittsburg, Pa., cut his throat with a penknife at 11 o'clock this morning in a cell at the parish prison. He will die. Fitzsimmons left along letter, in which he says:

"I have pursued crime with its fatal consequences, my liberty is again jeopardized and as liberty or death is paramount in my mind I prefer the latter to imprisonment, disgrace, slow death and dragging further in the mire the good name of honorable and respected relatives."

Fitzsimmons, after writing the letter this morning, jumped into bed, threw a blanket over his head and apparently went to sleep. Half an hour later one of the attendants in the jail heard him groaning, and on going to the bed found Fitzsimmons had slashed his throat three time while under the blanket and was weak from the loss of blood. Fitzsimmons succumbed to his injuries on Friday morning. Thus ends a peculiar criminal career.

CONNOR.

(Too late for last week.)

IN THE LAND OF THE LIVING.—Well Mr. Editor, you will probably be thinking that the people of the place have passed out of existence, but we will now try and convince you that such is not the case....Connor has never been remarkable as a place of sensational happenings, but since sleighing came everything seemed to have changed and the former monotony of the place has been replaced by everything that is enjoyable.... Tea-meetings, concerts, and social parties, affording pleasure-seekers all that they desire, are quite numerous. But although this is the case we would not have you think that the Connorites have formed habits similar to those acquired by the ancient inhabitants of Pompeii. No, they have still a keen eye to business and are as capable as ever with regard to providing for the future. To substantiate this statement we might just refer you to the two grand organizations, viz: The Chosen Friends and the Patrons of Industry, which are at present flourishing here. By the former society a man is enabled to take time by the forelock and by getting his life insured provide for his wife and little ones should he be unexpectedly summoned to cross the Jordon. Oh yes! but we must not forget to mention the sumptuous feed of oysters partaken of by the members of this lodge not long since. We were not able to be present on this occasion, but we believe that each member received a copious supply of oysters in return for which he was expected to make a speech when the supper was over. The first man called on was Mr Geo. Livingstone, who manfully mounted the platform, but Geordie's heart, or his stomach, failed him, and he was obliged to "stand down" rather uncermoniously. Messrs. Sloan, Drummond, Guest, McLelland and others were also called on but they manifested symptoms similar to Geordie's. This was a very unusual occurrence as all these gentlemen are possessed of more than ordinary ability as orators; whether it was the thoughts of being separated from the bosoms of their families or that some other man might enjoy their insurance money or the O—S—never! that "sickened" them we cannot say. However, when this was all over it was discovered that Mr. Alex. McElroy had just finished his repast and was ready to make a few remarks, so Alex. took the stand and delivered the speech of the evening for which he was awarded another "small feed" of oysters.

The Ayr magistrates have imposed a fine of $20 and costs upon the three trustees of the school board who refused to attend the first meeting of the board.

Mr. Youmans, the artistic painter of Orangeville, paid us a friendly visit last week. He has taken several contracts in this section—and any who may require first class work will never regret of giving him the preference.—Erin Advocate.

On Tuesday, the 2nd, Miss Stevenson, teacher at Newson's Corners, East Luther, died suddenly while on her way home from school. She taught as usual all day, and on her way home in the evening, not feeling very well, dropped into a neighbor's house close to the school. While there she grew rapidly worse and died before medical aid could be summoned. Heart failure was the trouble. An inquest was not considered necessary. Miss Stevenson's home is in Listowel. She was of a very quiet and retiring disposition, but has been troubled for some time with an affection of the heart which ultimately resulted in her death.

An excellent programe is being prepared for the occasion and the affair will undoubtedly be a grand success. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

SHELBURNE WON.—It is very seldom that the sports of our northern town get the drop on Orangeville in sporting competition, but they did it neatly on Monday night. Our curling club paid Shelburne a visit for the purpose of playing a match in the tankard competition, and the result is a defeat for Orangeville. Shelburne captured the game by 11 shots.

Sanderman of Hockley will be tried on the murder of J. A. Montgomery, the facts of which were fully reported at the time. The usual number of seduction cases are on hand, and everything promises to be pretty lively time.

FROM THE OLD SOD.—The other day Mr Wm. Harding of this town received a SUN containing a chunk of turf from the county of Tyrone, Ireland, sent a present by a friend and same instead plucked in Glasvin, the country where Captain Stewart Parnell is taking a short long sleep. Mr. Harding has also an ivy leaf picked from the ruins of Shane O'Neil's castle. He presented THE SUN with a little bunch of heather.

INTERESTING TO LAW BREAKERS.—P. D. Clark, a Dufferin county hotel keeper, was fined for selling liquor on Sunday. Application was made to the C. P. D. court this morning for a rule nisi to quash the conviction on the ground that the proprietor was out of the hotel all day, and the bustler with some companions got into the bar and were enjoying themselves in his absence. Judgment was reserved.—Thursday's Telegram.

THE WIDE, WIDE WORLD.—The entertainment given in the town hall on Friday evening in aid of the organ fund of St. Andrew's church was not attended as largely as it should have been. The program was pleasing throughout, but Miss Maggie Marshall who read the story of the "Wide, Wide World," deserves special mention. The people unfortunately, were small, but they will start a fund for the purpose of purchasing a new organ for St Andrew's.

BILL FOR DAMAGES.—Mr John Graham of the First war has instructed his solicitor to present the Orangeville council with a bill for damages to his property caused by the great flood of June 1890. It cost Mr. Graham considerable money to fix the place up again. Last year he asked for a refund of taxes, which was refused, but this year the council would not comply with a similar request and Mr. Graham will now put in a bill that will astonish them.

J L Gilmour, has recently been called upon to pass, in the death of his beloved mother, we take this opportunity of expressing our sincere fellow feeling with him in the loss he has sustained; and that a letter be sent to him conveying our kindest sympathy and assuring him that our earnest prayers ascend on his behalf to the God of all comfort that He will sustain, console and bless him in this hour of bitter bereavement."

Applications.

It takes only this to thoroughly remove Dandruff, stop itching of the scalp, and make the hair soft and pliable. In fact, Anti-Dandruff is a perfect hair tonic—all say so who use it.

JIM WON THE POT.—Messrs. Jas. E. Booth of the Elgin house and Thos. White of Glen Cross settled a little dispute on Saturday as to their respective merits as marksmen. A week ago a match was arranged for $10 a side, and the contestants met on the old O. V. B. grounds on east Broadway and settled the dispute. A target was erected and rifles were used. Each man fired ten shots, and Mr. Booth succeeded in winning the match by a handsome score. Tom's admirers say it was his day off.

ELETCHER'S TRIAL TO MORROW.—Lawyer Fletcher of Shelburne, who is charged with attempting to assault little 12-year old Lottie McLeod of the same place, will appear for trial before his honor Judge McCarthy to-morrow (Friday). The particulars of this case appeared in THE SUN of last week, and there is nothing new to add. Fletcher, who has languished in jail for the past two weeks, keenly feels the disgrace he has brought down on his own head, and if he is fortunate enough to escape imprisonment he'll likely leave this part of the country.

DEATH OF MRS. MORRISON.—Mrs. Margaret Morrison, relict of the late William Morrison, who has been ailing for some months back and who has been confined to bed for about six weeks, died at her residence on John street on Saturday night. The funeral took place on Monday afternoon to the Forest Lawn cemetery and was largely attended, the deceased being very much respected by all who knew her. General sympathy is felt for the family, who have been bereft of their nearest and dearest friend. Mrs. Morrison was a daughter of Mr. Edward Ellis of Caledon.

FATALITY AT FERGUS.—A sad coasting accident occurred at Fergus on Tuesday afternoon about 4 30 to a farmer named Joseph Hall of Garafraxa and his son, aged about 17. They were driving a team up Tower street hill when they encountered some boys coming down on a hand sleigh. The horses took fright, throwing both father and son out of the sleigh, and ran away. The young man was taken to Dr. Johnson's surgery, where he died about two hours afterward from the injuries he received. It is not known yet what injuries Mr. Hall has sustained, as he was taken to his home near Belwood.

THROWN FROM HIS CUTTER.—Last Saturday morning Mr George Robinson of Orangeville was driving home from Mono, and when a short distance from town the horse became frightened and threw Mr. Robinson from his cutter. He fell upon his shoulder and the force of the fall was such as to dislocate it. Mr. R managed to climb into the rig again and arrived home without further trouble. Drs Henry were summoned and attended to his injuries, but before they could do so chloroform had to be administered and it took three able-bodied men to get the joint back to its place. Mr. Robinson is recovering, but it will be some days before he will be able to be out again

THE DOCTOR WON.—Dr. Lewis took a jaunt down to the city last week to see if Toronto was in the same old place yet, and his mind was set at ease when he discovered that the city had not budged an inch. After assuring himself of the fact the doctor purchased a copy of the Empire and wended his way towards the Walker house. He was devouring the political news of the day when an old friend, Mr. Geo Fulford, the patent medicine man of Brockville, came along and explained how the Grit candidate was going to head the procession down in Lennox. In fact Mr. Fulford was so sure the Tory would have no show that he offered to post $50 just as a little prop to hold up his statement. Of course the doctor is not given to the habit of betting, but as the wager was directed at one his Tory blood would not keep cool and Mr Fulford's fifty was covered in a jiffy by five of the doctor's elegant bills. Everybody is aware of the great victory gained by the Conservatives in Lennox last Thursday, and it is unnecessary to add that Dr. Lewis' reputation as a political prophet is established beyond a doubt.

ANOTHER ONE GONE.—The death rat at the Orangeville jail is steadily going up, and after a while the county council will have to run an undertaking establishment in connection with the combination. At 4 o'clock on Friday afternoon poor old Mrs Robinson, 81 years of age, gasped her last in a narrow cell in the jail poorhouse in solitude. Her husband owned a fine farm in Mulmur a few years ago, but disposed of it on condition that the purchaser, who has since gone to his last reckoning, should provide for himself and his aged wife for the remainder of their days. He lived up to his pledge by selling the farm again and taking the aged though honest couple's shift for their lives. A short time afterwards the old man died, and a week or so later the poverty stricken woman was compelled, though she committed no crime, to spend the remaining years of her life in a criminal cell. Mrs. Robinson was an inmate of the jail for four years. During the last four weeks of her stay on this mundane sphere she could not arise from her iron bed, and her last and only request was to place her remains beside those of her husband up in Mulmur. Gov. Sutherland communicated the poor old woman's request to several of her near relatives in that township, but they replied to the effect that they would take no action and to dispose of her poor old frame in the same manner as in the case of other paupers. Thus poor old Mrs. Robinson's farewell appeal was not complied with and she was buried in the paupers' plot in the Town cemetery on Saturday morning. Wouldn't it be a grand idea to send over to Cuba and get some of the heathen to come over and do missionary work in the county of Dufferin? Thousands of dollars go out of this country to evangelize the heathen, where a great deal should remain right at home to complete work that was commenced a century ago.

ATLHONE.

THINGS UNWELL.—We are sorry to say that our friend, Mr. Hislin, is confined to the house with a severe attack of la grippe. We hope soon to see the genial Barney around again.... Mr. T. McCabe, clerk of Adjala township, was laid up last week with the grip.

Keep the Works in good order.

NORMAN, Ont., January 13, 1891.

W. H. COMSTOCK, Brockville, Ont.

DEAR SIR,—Your "Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills" are the best regulator for the system that humanity can get. Life is as the time piece: frail and delicate are many of its works. A tiny particle of foreign substance adheres to the smallest wheel in the works, and what is the result?—at first, only a slight difference is perceptible in its time-keeping, but wait and see the obstruction grows, the irregularity becomes greater, until at last, what could have been rectified with little trouble, in the beginning, will now require much care in thoroughly cleansing the entire works. So it is in human life—a slight derangement is neglected, it grows and increases, imperceptibly at first, then rapidly, until what could, in the beginning, have been cured with little trouble, becomes almost fatal. To prevent this, I advise all to purify the system frequently, by the use of Morse's Pills, and so preserve vigor and vitality.

Yours faithfully,
H. F. ATWELL.

Sleep Dispelled

Weak!

Strengthened, refreshed hobbled his plough, his lungs were sound and he had an appetite that would satisfy the ungodly enough.

He greeted his wife with a jovial laugh, And wondered in reply the reason enough.

The toil was hard for the tired two people— In fact on the shores of an Irish lough— But his well-fed team was strong and tough, And he piled his plough to finish and tough.

He toiled all day and the crow cried enough Here around he land though he oft cried "Enough!" But his plough at eve struck a hidden snag With a force that sent the share sheer through.

The frightened team ran off with the plough, With the speed of the wind from the ploughboy though— He shouted "Whoa!" and into a slough It plunged, where the mud was rich as dough.

LOBELIA SAM.

"Sarah! Sarah Ann, I say!"

The clickety-click of the sewing machine suddenly ceased, and a pleasant faced girl appeared in the sitting-room door.

"What is it, mother?" she asked as she caught sight of her mother's troubled face.

"Just—look—at—that!" catching her breath between each word. "I was sure there was cake enough for supper, but that's all I find," and she eyed the broken bun ruefully.

"There was plenty this morning, I set only two aloon from the loaf for Nellie's and little Joey's dinner. It has been stolen again."

"I don't see how the rats—" began Mrs. Foster.

"Rats!" sniffed Cynthia Ward contemptuously as she went through the room with her basket of freshly folded clothes. Sarah laughed merrily, and even her mother smiled.

"Well, talking will do no good," said Mrs. Foster glancing at the clock. "It's nearing 5 o'clock and the men will soon be in from the field. Shut the oven doors, Sarah, and stir the fire. I'll beat up some ginger puffs, they'll bake in twenty minutes. Your father won't mind if supper is a little late."

Long before she had finished speaking, Mrs. Foster was at work, and the last words came back from the pantry to the accompaniment of a vigorous beating.

"I declare for it, Sarah Ann, if that isn't a shame!" exclaimed Cynthia Ward, with the familiarity which often characterizes New England "help" as she and Sarah were laying the supper table together. "To think of the good victuals your ma always has, and plenty of 'em too! If she was so close with her men folks as Mis' Deacon Wilkins is, I shouldn't wonder at it; but her tables are always just loaded. It's their own fault if they leave the table hungry."

"Whose fault, the rats?" asked Sarah mischievously.

"Two-legged rats. I think it's time a trap was set for 'em."

"So do I! I wish we could, and catch one too. We'd put a ball on him!"

"It's that Sam Slick, and I know it," said Cynthia as she disappeared down the cellar-way.

Five o'clock brought the men from the hay-field. Tired and warm, they enjoyed resting a few moments in the cool dining room. Sam Slick came in last, as usual. He had stopped to part his long hair exactly in the middle, and to curl the ends of a still lighter mustache, for, with the conceit that usually accompanies light blue eyes, Sam thought himself very fascinating to the ladies, especially to Squire Foster's eldest daughter.

"I should know Miss Sarah made these cakes; they are delicious," drawled Sam, with what was intended for a sweet smile, as he helped himself for the third time.

"You are mistaken for once. Mother made them."

"Like mother, like daughter. What greater praise can I give either?" said Sam with a smile more killing than the first.

"O, fudge!" said Sarah contemptuously.

The men all laughed, but Squire Foster frowned. Sarah was the idol of his heart and Sam was getting rather too bold.

It was evident the next morning that Cynthia had something on her mind. She gave Sarah numerous sly nods and winks, that were very mystifying, but it was not till the children were off to school and Mrs. Foster had gone to the dairy house that she unfolded her plans.

"I've thought it all out," she said as soon as they were alone. "If the rats are getting so bold and knowin' as to open cans and peek under pans, I think it's time something was done about it."

"So do I; but what can we do?"

"Set a trap."

"How?"

"That's what I've been planning. I've been up into the garret and found some dried lobelia. It's on the stove steeping now. Can't you smell it?"

"Where? yes. I didn't know what smelled so. But what are you going to do with it?"

"Put some in some cakes when it's steeped enough, and put them where the rat found the others. I want it to be good and strong, but I shall put some caraway in to kill the scent."

"Why, the rats? No 'tain't poison; but 'twill make him sick."

"Hope it will," said Sarah, entering heartily into the fun of the thing. "I'll help make the cakes."

She had noticed the frown on her father's face the night before, and knew well enough that Sam's stay with them was short; but, if he was the tool, as she and Cynthia thought, she would gladly have him exposed before he left.

If Sam had known how closely Sarah watched his comings and goings that day he would have felt flattered, indeed. In the middle of the afternoon he came to the barn with a load of hay, and as was his wont, walked back to the field stopping at the house on his way for a drink of water. Sarah hurried to the store-room and met Cynthia coming out.

"The trap is sprung! Three cakes are gone!" she whispered excitedly.

"O, it almost frightens me to think of it!" exclaimed Sarah no less excited. "I am glad of it, though; I like to have people brought out, if they are really guilty."

The day was hot and sultry. A few heavy clouds loomed threateningly up in the southeast, while distant mutterings of thunder could now and then be heard.

"Going to get a shower, Squire?" asked Gibson as they tossed the fragrant hay into convenient tumbles.

"Not before night, I think," replied the Squire as he stopped to wipe the sweat from his forehead. "Hope we can clear this field first."

"We can if nothing happens," returned Gibson. "But what ails Sam? Is he in a fit?"

He might well ask, for Sam had thrown himself on the ground and was rolling about in agony, while his groans were fearful to hear.

Squire Foster hurried to his side. "What's the matter, Sam?" he asked, "are you sick?"

"Oee!" groaned Sam. "I'm going to die! I'm going to die!"

"I guess not," said the doctor. "Fresh air, hings were sweet and he had an appetite that would satisfy the ungodly enough. Gibson; there is hay enough in the barn for a cart load; we'll load him in the house."

It was an interesting spectacle they made as they entered the farm-house, Gibson going first, and Squire Foster trying his hand to keep the swaying burden from the hay cart. Fortunately, Frost, the doctor, lived close by, and he joined the procession, delving in his small dispatched bottles.

"What is it? Is anyone hurt?" anxiously inquired Mrs. Foster as she hurried out, camphor-bottle in hand.

"Oh! I'm sick, so sick!" groaned Sam.

"I'm going to die! I'm going to die!"

"What have you been eating?" asked Dr. Harris, after looking them over, professionally, for a few minutes.

"Nothing! nothing! I'm going to die!"

"Has he fallen or received a blow on his head in any way?" he next asked the Squire.

"Not that I know of. Perhaps he has been drinking too much ice water."

"It must be he has been poisoned," interrupted Mrs. Foster, who had been watching Sam's contortions. "There is poison-ivy down in the swamp, you know, John."

"It doesn't act exactly like poison—" began the doctor slowly.

"There is no poison about it," said Sarah stepping forward. "I think I know what ails him. We have been mixing things from the storeroom—cakes and pies and other things—at different times, and so to-day we set a trap for the thief. We made some cakes and flavored them with lobelia and put them where the others were; they are missing now, and somebody is sick, it seems."

"It won't do him any harm, sir," put in Cynthia, who could keep quiet no longer. "Lobelia never kills anyone."

There was a moment's pause, then such a shout as went up startled the swallows in their nests under the eaves. Dr. Harris laughed till the tears ran down his time-worn cheeks.

Sam managed to get on his feet and crawl away toward the barn amid the merriment. There the Squire found him at night and tried in vain to get him to go to the house for his supper. He was not hungry, he said, and if the Squire would settle with him he would rather not work any longer. This he was only too glad to do, and before morning Sam was gone.

Squire Foster advised the boys not to say anything about the affair, but somehow the story leaked out and Sam Slick was known ever after as "Lobelia Sam."—Julia S. Lawrence.

DICKENS'S PET DAUGHTER.

The Great Novelist's Favorite "Mamie" to Write of Her Father.

Pretty "Mamie" Dickens was already considered by those who knew Charles Dickens best to be the novelist's favorite daughter. To none of his children, perhaps, was Dickens more affectionately attached, and the "pet daughter" saw much of her father under all circumstances. When even the dogs were chased out of the novelist's study, Mamie was allowed to stay. The daughter is now a full-grown woman, living quietly just outside of London. For the first time since her father's death, Miss Dickens has been persuaded to write of him whom she knew so well. During 1892 there will be published in the Ladies' Home Journal, of Philadelphia, a series of articles by Miss Dickens under the attractive title of "My Father as I Recall Him." Fortunately for the thousands who will read what she writes in this series, Miss Dickens has a retentive memory, and she made copious notes during her father's lifetime. She will tell in this series everything she remembers of her father; how he educated his children; his family life and his personal habits; how he wrote his famous books; his love of flowers and animals; how Christmas was spent in the Dickens household; how the novelist romped with his children; the famous people who came to the Dickens home, and his bad years and closing days. No articles ever published have in them so much promise of telling the world things which it has never known of Dickens, and Miss Dickens's story of her father's life will be eagerly looked for in thousands of homes where the name of Dickens is like a household word.

The Battenkill River, in Vermont, is to be stocked with 3,500 yearling California salmon. The experiment is regarded with great interest, and it is generally believed that the salmon will thrive, for the river contains abundant food for the fish and is free from refuse.

Gambetta's Heart.

That Gambetta's heart was deposited in the monument recently unveiled in his memory near Paris has been briefly announced by telegraph. Rumor had it some months ago that after the death of M. Paul Bert, Gambetta's friend, to whom the French patriot committed that strange souvenir, the heart had been lost. It had been preserved in a glass vase full of alcohol, however, and kept in an iron safe securely by M. Chaillot, a brother of M. Bert's son-in-law, and it never left that repository until the day the monument at Ville d'Avray was dedicated. Before being covered with brickwork the vase was inclosed in a metal case, and this in turn in a wooden coffer made out of wood from Alsace. The outer box also contains a parchment attesting that the heart contained in the vase is that of Gambetta.

Biggest Ball Ever Fired From a Cannon.

Four feet in length and weighing 2,600 pounds. Such were the dimensions and weight of the enormous projectile fired from the largest cannon yet manufactured at Krupp's works, at Essen, for the fortifications of Cronstadt. It is made of the finest quality of cast steel and weighs 270,000 pounds.

A Fact

WORTH knowing is the fact that after numerous all other remedies had failed to cure, relief in Ayer's Sarsaparilla. French medication of this nature cannot compare to hand daily. Rheumatism, Neuralgia and sickness over prevalent as Blood disease, Rheumatic Gout, and the like, are thoroughly by constant use of the most wonderful alterative.

Mrs. E. Irving Dodge, 110 West 126th street, New York, certifies:—

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great difficulty, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months. I am pleased to say that it effected a complete cure, and that I have since had no return of the disease."

Mrs. L. A. Stark, Madena, N. H., writes: "One year ago I was taken ill with rheumatism, being confined to my home six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."

"I have taken a great deal of medicine, but nothing has done me so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I felt its beneficial effects before I had quite finished one bottle, and I can freely testify that it is the best blood-medicine I know of."—L. W. Ward, Sr., Woodland, Texas.

On Sunday, some person or persons, supposed to be boys, effected an entrance into the public school building and committed acts of disgraceful vandalism. Every room but one was entered, ink was spilled over the floors and smeared on the white aprons and other apparel used by the lady teachers during school hours and left in the rooms. Slates were broken, books torn and other depredations committed. Such outrages, and this is not the first time the school has been so visited, cause the question whether we live in a civilized country or not, and creates a strong desire to see the offenders, even though they may be juveniles, brought to justice and severely punished. We understand the trustees have a pretty good idea who the guilty parties are, and a meeting of the board will be held to see what had better be done in the matter.—Mt. Forest Rep.

Dear Sirs:—Your Dr Morse's Indian Root Pills are the best medicine for rheumatism that I have ever used. Last spring I was troubled greatly with it in my leg; I used one box of Morse's Pills, and was cured.

Yours gratefully,

Emma Borley, 52 years of Brooklyn, who has been wanted in Kingston, N.Y., since November for the heinous crime of selling her own daughter, was arrested the other night. The woman lived in Kingston. She had a daughter 12 years old, who had caught the fancy of a commercial traveler. The woman bargained with the man, who has not been captured, to let him use the child for an immoral purpose for $10 per month. The child escaped from the man and told her story to the police.

A son of Mr. Thos Moran, Adjala, had a serious mishap the other evening. He loaded a gun with buckshot and stood it against a wall while he went into another room. When he had gone a few yards away the gun fell, discharging the whole contents into one of the boy's feet. Drs. Wright and Dunning were sent for and they think they can save the limb.

The Rest of Rock Salt, for Stock.

Read what Prof. Robertson, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says regarding proper ways of salting stock:—"Dairy cattle should have access to salt every day. A series of experiments has convinced me that when necessary denied salt for a period of some one week, they will yield from ½ to ¾ per cent less milk, and that of no better or quality. Such milk will on an average turn sour in twenty four hours less time than milk drawn from the same or similar cows receiving salt every day, all other conditions of treatment being equal."

THE only chemically pure Salt ever discovered, analyzed 99 44-100 Pure Salt. All kinds of stock will do better where this Salt is used; one ton will go four times as far as common salt, hence it is cheaper. It is the finest Salt in the world for the preservation of all kinds of meat, all the large packers are using it. It is sold cheaper than any other lump salt. We guarantee this Salt as advertised. Make a trial and you will always use it; we have in stock fine and coarse, as
